Mr. Trippier: Preliminary indications are that our coastal waters continue to support a wide range of marine mammal species and regular surveys carried out for Government by the Natural Environment Research Council's sea mammal research unit show that grey seal populations continue to increase. Common seal numbers are now stable following the 1988 viral epidemic, and we hope to see signs of recovery soon. As far as dolphins are concerned no reliable estimates of population are available.

My Department has already commissioned a number of new research projects on marine mammals including the appointment of a co-ordinator to oversee the recording and sampling of marine mammal strandings in England and Wales, the carrying out of post mortem and contaminant analysis for selected cetaceans, including dolphins, washed ashore and support for improved sighting schemes and population studies.

More generally the initiatives we have taken to implement measures agreed at the third North sea conference, held in the Hague in March 1990, which apply to all our coastal waters, will do much to improve the quality of our seas. Marine mammals may be particularly at risk from PCBs which can accumulate in their fatty tissues and notable amongst the third conference measures is the agreement to phase out and destroy all remaining identifiable uses of PCBs by 1999.

River Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to amend the criteria used to determine river quality so as to reflect pollutant levels in river life.

Mr. Trippier: We are currently reviewing with the National Rivers Authority the existing schemes for classifying river quality in conjunction with the work of developing the system of statutory quality objectives provided for in the Water Act 1989. The outcome of the review will be published for consultation in due course.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ask the district auditor to review the action of councils and councillors when a substantial proportion of the community charge has not been collected.

Mr. Key: All community chargepayers have a right to expect their local authority to collect the charge in a diligent and economic manner. The Audit Commission has published useful guidance to local authorities on improving collection performance. In general local authorities are seeking to collect the charge efficiently. I would expect that there are no cases where action by councillors is impeding effective collection, but if there were the auditor already has a duty to under section 20 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to certify, where a loss has been incurred or deficiency caused by wilful misconduct of any person, that the amount of that loss or deficiency is due from that person. The auditor may recover the amount for the benefit of the authority from that person concerned. Councillors may therefore be liable for uncollected community charges where the failure to collect results from their misconduct.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the various guidance circulars he has issued to local authorities concerning collection of the poll tax.

Mr. Key: My Department issued a practice note to local authorities covering all aspects of the collection of the community charge. A copy is in the Library. The note is currently being revised and updated by the Institute of Revenues Rating and Valuation.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households he expects to benefit from the new community charge reduction scheme in Berwick borough, Castle Morpeth borough and Alnwick district.

Mr. Key: Information on the number of people expected to benefit from the community charge reduction scheme broken down by local authority areas will be available once authorities have returned their initial grant claim forms.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the year on year increase in standard spending assessment for 1991-92 in respect of (a) Westminster, (b) Salford, (c) Wigan and (d) Bolton.

Mr. Key: The percentage increases in SSA between 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows:
(a) 22·1, (b) 16·3, (c) 18·6 and (d) 17·9.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in tabular form, (a) the establishment of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and (b) the number of staff employed for each year since 1987.

Mr. Baldry: The complement and number of staff in post in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution from its formation in 1987 are set out in the table.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution staffing[1]

Year (1 April)	Complement	Number of staff in post
1988	183	158
1989	194	165
1991	248	[2]232

Notes: [1]All figures exclude the former radioactive waste policy and administrative division, (25 administrative, 2 professional staff) which transferred from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to the DOE directorate of pollution control and waste in November 1990.
[2]1 March.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's complement has been authorised to expand to over 300 by 1 April 1992 and may require a further increase to around 400 when integrated pollution control is in full operation.

A recruitment competition for pollution inspectors has recently been completed, and has produced 38 successful candidates to fill the remaining vacancies and authorised new posts.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will detail the criteria used to assess the level of pollution on British beaches.

Mr. Baldry: Bathing water quality is assessed according to standards set out in directive 76/160/EEC.

Environmental Action Guide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the "Environmental Action Guide" was issued to Government Departments; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: An initial working version of the "Environmental Action Guide" was circulated to all Government Departments immediately following publication of the environment White Paper last year. The guide itself, together with the first of a continuing series of advisory notes on specific environmental topics such as CFCs and timber in buildings, will be published by HMSO shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990 to 28 February 1991, how many planning applications have been determined by Leeds development corporation (a) within one month of receipt, (b) between one and two months of receipt and (c) after more than two months of receipt.

Mr. Key: Information is not collected in the format requested. The available information shows that, for the year ending September 1989, 131 planning applications were decided by the Development Corporation of which 57 per cent. were determined within eight weeks of receipt. For the year ending September 1990, 179 applications were decided of which 58 per cent. were determined within eight weeks.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to allow the Rural Development Commission to retain receipts from the sale of its portfolio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: It is our policy that the Rural Development Commission should retain receipts from the sale of their workspace portfolio: up to the targets agreed for each year. The receipts are used to finance the commission's agreed expenditure.

Environment Council

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 18 March.

Mr. Heseltine: My hon. Friend the Minister for Environment and Countryside and I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council agreed a common position on a directive to tighten up controls on emissions from lorries and buses. The United Kingdom took a lead in pressing for this measure, which will introduce strict new pollution standards for large diesel engined vehicles to match those set last year for cars. The controls, which will come into effect in 1995 and 1996, represent the toughest achievable standards. The motor industry will have a clear target and a manageable timetable for the substantial work which now needs to be done.

Agreement was reached on a directive setting minimum standards for the collection and treatment of sewage. The so-called municipal waste water directive requires that all communities above a certain size should be provided with sewerage systems, and that sewage should in general receive full secondary treatment before it can be discharged. Additional treatment to remove nutrient substances is required where this is necessary to protect the water environment. The directive also allows for primary treatment only for certain coastal discharges where this can be demonstrated to be sufficient to protect the environment. Other provisions require treatment of analagous industrial discharges, and an end to the disposal of sewage sludge at sea. This measure represents a major step forward in the protection of the water environment throughout the community. The Government's decision last year to introduce treatment for all remaining major coastal discharges, and the huge investment programme put in place at the time of water privatisation, means that the United Kingdom is well placed to comply with the directive.

The Council agreed a common position on a directive amending for the seventh time directive 67/548/EEC on the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances. The amending directive updates requirements for manufacturers or importers of a new chemical substance to provide data on its hazardous properties. It introduces harmonised notification requirements for substances produced in small quantities, with exceptions in certain circumstances to encourage research and development.

A directive on the content and disposal of batteries and a new framework directive on waste management, the substance of which had been agreed at previous meetings, were formally adopted by the Council.

The Council had a useful discussion on aspects of a proposed regulation controlling the movement of waste within, into and out of the European Community. The United Kingdom, supported by other member states, stressed the importance of incorporating the principle of self-sufficiency in waste disposal, both within countries and for the Community as a whole.

Proposals for a directive to protect fauna, flora and habitats, and for a Community ecological labelling scheme were briefly discussed. In both cases the United Kingdom called for the measures to be agreed as soon as possible, and the presidency said it would seek agreement at the next Environment Council.

The Council had preliminary discussions on two new proposals on the evaluation and control of environmental risks from existing chemicals, and on a Community environment fund—LIFE.

The Council also discussed action taken by member states and the Commission in response to environmental problems in the Gulf. Ministers were briefed by Mr. Al Arrayed, Health Minister of Bahrain, on the environmental situation in the Gulf states. Member states welcomed the efforts co-ordinated by the European Commission to complement initiatives by the International Maritime Organisation and the United Nations Environmental Programme. The Council agreed on the need to provide further assistance to the Gulf clean-up operations, and to develop proposals for responding to similar disasters in the future in collaboration with member states and other international organisations.

Sea Bathing

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects to announce the results of the 1990 study into the health risks of sea bathing; and whether those studies are to continue.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is awarding a further contract to the Water Research Centre to manage large-scale studies into the health risks of sea bathing using the methodologies developed over the last two years. The WRC will invite tenders from suitably qualified professional institutions and organisations to undertake these studies.

The research will be jointly funded by my Department, the Department of Health, Welsh Office and the National Rivers Authority. It will be undertaken at selected bathing beaches where the waters are of different microbiological quality to allow a further investigation of the relationship between the levels of contamination and the incidence of illness.

The results of the 1990 studies at Moreton (Wirral) and Ramsgate will be placed in the Library in early April.

Community Charge

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimate for each local authority in England of (a) the community charge for 1990-91, (b) the charge set for 1991-92 before the new grant announced on 19 March, (c) the charge for 1991-92 after the new grant, (d) the bill in 1991-92 after the community charge reduction scheme for a couple who had 75 per cent. of the average rateable value for their area and (e) the bill in 1991-92 for a couple who had 50 per cent. of the average rateable value for their area.

Mr. Portillo: The new grant announced yesterday will reduce charges set in England in 1991-92 by £140, or to zero where the local charge was below that figure. The details are as follows:

Notes to table

Column 1: shows the headline community charge set on average in each authority for 1990-91;

Column 2: shows the latest information available to the Department of the Environment on community charges actually set in each authority for 1991-92. For most authorities the information is taken from returns to the Department; but in some cases the figures are taken from press reports or other sources;

Column 3: shows what the 1991-92 charge in column 2 will be after the £140 reduction announced on 19 March;

Column 4: shows the combined charge bill which will be paid by a couple living in a property with 75 per cent. of the average rateable value for their area, after any help they receive from the community charge reduction scheme;

Column 5: is the same as column 4 but for a couple living in a property with 50 per cent. of the average rateable value for their area.

The community charge paid by many people will be less than shown in column 3 of the table. Some will be helped by the community charge reduction scheme and people on low incomes may be entitled to a reduction of up to 80 per cent. through community charge benefit.

The community charge reduction scheme helps those who have not moved since 1 April 1990 and who face an increase of more than £2 a week over their last rate bill, counting a maximum of two charges for their property. When first introduced, the Government published a "scheme charge" for each authority which was to be used to calculate the reduction to be given, unless the actual charge set were lower. This new grant means that actual charges set for 1991-92 will in every case be lower than the scheme charge and will thus form the basis for the reduction scheme. Therefore, one and two-adult households who have not moved should nowhere pay more than about £2 a week above what they paid in rates in 1989-90.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest information he has, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, on the number of employment training participants who fall either within (a) the Guarantee group and (b) the Aim group; if he will give comparable data for one year ago; and if he will make a statement about how he intends to monitor participation by both groups when ET is delivered by training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's guarantee and aim covers a range of options to help unemployed people back to work: from employment training provided through TECs to others offered by the Employment Service. My Department monitors the provision offered by TECs in the light of the overall position.

The information requested is provided in the following table.

Cathedral Employment Enterprises

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the grant to Cathedral Employment Enterprises for projects in Wandsworth for each of the last three years.

Mr. Jackson: Details of the grants to Cathedral Employment Enterprises for projects in Wandsworth are available only for the last two years. The amounts are:

1990-91	[1]478,822

[1] This figure includes an estimate for March 1991.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussion he has had with Cathedral Employment Enterprises on future funding of (i) the Earlsfield job club, (ii) English for Asian girls project, Earlsfield, (iii) general office skills training, Earlsfield, and (iv) Milan Asian Centre, Tooting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: (i) The current contract with Earlsfield job club expires on 28 June 1991. The award of a contract beyond that date will be subject to competitive tendering during April/May.

(ii)-(iv) These projects are currently subject to negotiation by AZTEC.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the guarantee that all 16-year-olds with special needs will be offered a place, if they so wish, on a youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government remain fully committed to the guarantee of the offer of a suitable YT place to all young people who are under 18, not in full-time education or in a job and who are seeking entry to YT.

This applies to young people with special needs as well as to all other young people. Trainees with special training needs are identified by a process of endorsement, and training and enterprise councils—and, where relevant, area offices of the Employment Department—are obliged to provide suitable high-quality training for them.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Female Circumcision

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government are taking to curtail the activities of persons entering the country to perform circumcision operations on female children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Female circumcision is a criminal offence. On convicting a person who does not have the right of abode of such an offence it would be open to a court to recommend deportation.

Life Sentences

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted murderers are at present in prison serving life sentences; and what is the cost of keeping one such prisoner in prison for (a) 15, (b) 20 or (c) 25 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 31 December 1990, the latest date for which figures are readily available, it is estimated that 2,300 prisoners were serving life sentences for murder in prison establishments in England and Wales. Detainees during Her Majesty's pleasure and persons sentenced to custody for life are included. It is not possible to distinguish the costs of holding a particular class of prisoner; the average cost of holding a prisoner was £321 per week in the year ending 31 March 1990.

Electoral Registration

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will consider bringing in legislation to enable women escaping domestic violence to register as electors without revealing their new addresses;

(2) how many representations he has received asking for women fleeing domestic violence to be able to register as electors without revealing their new addresses.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since September 1989 we have received four letters from hon. Members, five from local authorities and six from members of the public on this issue. I recognise that the hon. Member has raised a matter of genuine concern, but there are important democratic reasons for publishing the names and addresses of registered electors which make an amendment of the existing electoral law in the way proposed unacceptable.

Hunting

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list Government funds made available to fox hunts in England and Wales since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Home Office has made no such funds available to fox hunts.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is contained in table 3.4 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of the misuse of drugs: seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1989", a copy of which is in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Eskbank Bypass

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he expects the A7 Edinburgh to Galashiels trunk route bypass of Eskbank to be opened to traffic.

Mr. Lang: Construction work on the A7 Dalkeith western bypass is expected to be completed and the road opened to traffic this summer several months ahead of schedule.

Historic Buildings Council

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those persons who have, directly or indirectly, been in receipt of grants from the Historic Buildings Council in each of the past 10 years, while serving as members of the council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Historic building repair grants are awarded by my right hon. Friend, having first taken advice from the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland. In the past 10 years, one member of the council, Mr. Marc Ellington, has received historic building repair grant on one listed building while serving as a member of the council.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many grants have been authorised by the Historic Buildings Council in respect of Towie Barclay castle; what has been the value in each case; and in which years they were made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following historic building repair grants were approved for Towie Barclay castle and steadings:

	Amount of grant £	Paid
Towie Barclay castle
Phase I	8,800	1972-74
Phase II	2,000	1976-77
Towie Barclay castle steadings	36,684	1987-89

Tourism

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of financial support his Department has given to tourism in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 14 March 1991]: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million (cash)
1987-88	17·3
1988-89	18·7

Notes:

1. The figures for 1985-89 are in respect of expenditure on the promotion of tourism by the Scottish Tourist Board, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Scottish Development Agency. The figure for 1989-90 is in respect of the Scottish Tourist Board and the Highlands and Islands Development Board only.
2. Information in respect of the Scottish Development Agency for that year could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The Scottish Development Agency is involved in many projects with a tourism element, including training initiatives relevant to tourism, support for conferences held in Scotland, strategic studies, physical works, small business advice and environmental renewal.
3. Provision by the Highlands and Islands Development Board is through its marketing and projects programmes and under its section 8 assistance scheme; the figures do not include salary and administration costs incurred by the Board.
4. Total expenditure by the Scottish Tourist Board is provided, including salary and administration costs, in performing its statutory functions of promoting Scotland as a tourist destination, both within the United Kingdom and overseas, and encouraging investment in tourism infrastructure.

Shackleton Crash (South Harris)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons it was decided not to hold a fatal accident inquiry into the RAF Shackleton crash on South Harris in 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1991]: I have been asked to reply.

On behalf of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, who has responsibility for fatal accident inquiries, I advise the hon. Member that the question whether such an inquiry should be held received careful consideration. It is not the practice of the Lord Advocate, however, to divulge his reasons for deciding not to hold an inquiry.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telephone Use

15. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on proposals relating to low telephone users.

Mr. Lilley: British Telecom has agreed to introduce an improved and better targeted low user scheme this year. Low users will be able to opt to pay only half the standard rental, and get 30 free call units per quarter. The new scheme will be focused to benefit people who rely on the telephone as a lifeline. BT expects that more than 2 million people will be eligible for the new scheme.

Telecommunications

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the growth in telecommunications since 1984.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom has one of the fastest growing telecommunications markets in the world. The number of connections on the fixed network has grown by over 25 per cent. since 1984, and the volume of calls has increased by more than 60 per cent. in the same period. The growth in mobile services is even more spectacular, and there are now more than 1·1 million cellular radio subscribers. The United Kingdom equipment market has grown by over 60 per cent. since 1984, and the range of choice has increased substantially, and the United Kingdom has by far the largest value added services market in Europe.

2. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the Government's telecommunications policies.

Mr. Lilley: I set out the Government's proposals for liberalising the United Kingdom telecommunications market in my statement to the House on 5 March. My aim is to build on the policies of competition, choice and private enterprise that have been so successful, and to create the most open and dynamic telecommunications market in the world. The White Paper, "Competition and Choice: Telecommunications Policy for the 1990s", is available in the Library for Members who may wish to study the proposals in more depth.

30. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on consumer choice of the introduction of equal access, outlined in his Department's White Paper on telecommunications policy.

Mr. Lilley: The introduction of equal access will widen consumer choice substantially. It will make it simpler for consumers to select which operator carries their long-distance calls. They will be able to choose the operator providing the best or cheapest service.

Trade Statistics

20. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and (a) Poland, (b) Australia and (c) South Africa last year; and what were the principal elements for each.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1990, the United Kingdom had a positive visible trade balance of £606·5 million with Australia and £34·9 million with South Africa accounted for mainly by machinery and transport equipment. The balance of trade deficit with Poland was £135·7 million, the main elements of which were iron and steel.

Domestic Products (Labelling)

21. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with trading standards officers about misleading labelling of domestic products.

Mr. Leigh: While I have not met trading standards officers specifically to discuss the subject of misleading labelling the question of environmental claims in respect of goods was raised as part of a general discussion I had with representatives of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration, when I met them on 20 February.

North Devon Manufacturers Association

22. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any adverse comments about the work of the North Devon Manufacturers Association.

Mr. Lilley: On the contrary. I have heard nothing but good of its efforts to represent and support industry in the north Devon area throughout its 20 years of existence, and I wish it well in the future.

Exporters

23. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the categories of companies that have performed best in export markets over the last four years; and what assessments he has made of the reason for their success.

Mr. Sainsbury: The greatest success is achieved by companies that make a long-term commitment to export markets. We believe that the level and quality of management involvement is an important factor in success. Manufacturing exports increased by 70 per cent. in volume over the past 10 years.

Bulgaria

25. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the Bulgarian Ministers of Trade and Industry to discuss ways of increasing British assistance to Bulgaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Within the past few weeks I have met Mrs. Todorova and Mr. Daskalov, two of the three Bulgarian deputy Ministers of Foreign Economic Relations. The Government are providing assistance to Bulgaria through the IMF and the European Community and bilaterally via the know-how fund administered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. My Department will continue its efforts to stimulate trade and investment, supplemented by the support of the East European Trade Council whose chairman is visiting Bulgaria this week.

Consumer Affairs

26. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the local authorities trading standards officers to discuss consumer affairs.

Mr. Leigh: Although my right hon. Friend has not had any such meetings, I met representatives of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration last month to discuss consumer affairs.

Advice Agencies

27. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further assessment his Department has made of the implications of the poll tax on the workload of citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

Mr. Leigh: Citizens advice bureaux have had to deal with a number of inquiries arising from the introduction of the community charge, just as they used to on rates. The number of inquiries on the community charge rose in 1989-90 compared to 1988-89, but there was no significant change in the total number of inquiries dealt with by bureaux in 1989-90 compared to 1988-89. Figures relating to the current financial year are not yet available.

The Department of Environment has agreed to give the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux £36,000 this year to help with the costs of training bureaux workers to deal with these inquiries. The Scottish Office has also given Citizens Advice Scotland £36,000 over the last two years for the same purpose.

Inward Investment (USA)

28. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on inward investment from the United States of America.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom continues to be the preferred location for United States investment in Europe. United States Department of Commerce figures show that at end 1989 Britain's share of United States direct investment into the European Community stood at 41 per cent., representing a stock figure of over £30 billion.

Kuwait

29. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's role in helping British firms to play a part in the reconstruction of Kuwait.

Mr. Lilley: The Kuwait reconstruction co-ordination team in my Department is working closely with industry to help develop links with the Kuwaiti authorities responsible for planning and implementing reconstruction and to disseminate information about opportunities. A number of DTI/industry sectoral groups have been set up for this purpose to cover the areas most relevant to Kuwait's likely requirements. A prospectus setting out the experience and capabilities of United Kingdom industry and listing more than 160 companies was presented to the Government of Kuwait by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 9 February. The DTI has also helped set up a small team of business representatives in Kuwait to promote British industry's interests, and one of my officials accompanied a group of senior business men on a visit to Kuwait on 10 and 11 March. A list is being compiled of companies which have expressed an interest in reconstruction work.

35. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the investment of United Kingdom firms in the reconstruction of Kuwait.

Mr. Lilley: Many British companies wish to take part in the reconstruction of Kuwait and have invested considerable time and resources in developing proposals and in responding to invitations to tender. The DTI is helping British firms to establish working relations with the Kuwaiti authorities which warmly welcome British interest in participating in the reconstruction process.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by when his Department hopes to have created a database of British companies interested in competing for contracts with the Government of Kuwait after the initial emergency programme; and if he will list the companies included, by category.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 14 March 1991]: About 2,500 companies are now registered on the data base. My Department is still receiving many inquries from companies wishing to register their interests. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, I cannot reveal their names.

Information Technology

31. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his most recent estimate of the balance of trade in information technology with Japan.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no statistically recognised definition of information technology. However, divisions 75 and 76 of the standard international trade classification include information technology products and the estimated crude deficit in these divisions in 1990 was £1·8 billion. Our exports to Japan in these categories in 1990 increased in value by 17 per cent. over 1989.

Industrial Development (North of England)

32. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will visit the north of England to meet representatives of industry to discuss matters relating to his Department's activities in industrial development.

Mr. Leigh: During recent visits to the north of England, my colleagues and I have met a broad spectrum of local business leaders and discussed matters relating to industrial development. In the near future the Secretary of State will be meeting representatives of the Manchester financial and professional forum and the Tyne and Wear chamber of commerce. I have two planned visits to the north-east, where I have a particular interest in view of my position as godparent Minister for the region.

Eastern Europe

33. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the prospects for trade with the countries of eastern Europe.

Mr. Sainsbury: The short-term prospects for trade with most of the countries of eastern Europe have worsened this year. However, the prospects of investment in and longer term trade with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, are continuing to improve as their governments press ahead with reform and establish a proper legal and fiscal framework for business.

Steel Industry

34. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future of the steel industry.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Steel whenever appropriate. Their last meeting was on 7 September, and there are no plans for a further meeting at this stage.

International Trade

36. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the development of simpler international trade procedures.

Mr. Sainsbury: The development of simpler international trade procedures is largely the responsibility of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board—SITPRO—a non-departmental public body supported by the Department. SITPRO's central aims are the development of international standards for electronic data interchange where it has made a particularly significant contribution to what has become known as UN/EDIFACT—United Nations electronic data interchange for administration, commerce and transport. Secondly, they work for elimination of procedural barriers to trade with particular reference to measures associated with the creation of the single European market.

Production Statistics

37. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase/decrease in the production of the principal import competing and exporting industries between 1973 and 1990.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no officially recognised definition of "principal import competing and exporting industries".

Shipbuilding

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the work of the shipbuilding task force within his Department.

Mr. Leigh: The objective of the shipbuilding task force is to reduce state involvement in the shipbuilding industry, working for the elimination of production and development aids internationally while encouraging United Kingdom shipbuilders and marine equipment manufacturers to operate competitively in international markets and in the defence sector.

To that end, the task force is resolving any remaining problems arising from the disposal of British Shipbuilders; managing expenditure on the home shipbuilders credit guarantee scheme and the shipbuilding intervention fund; ensuring that the European Community seventh directive on aid to shipbuilding is operated in line with Ministers' objectives; attempting to ensure further progress in the European Community and the OECD in negotiating an agreement to end state aids for shipbuilding worldwide; and maintaining appropriate liaison with the Ministry of Defence on the future naval shipbuilding programme and on projects likely to affect shipyard capacity utilisation.

Inward Investment

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the percentage of United Kingdom inward investment projects going to (a) Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) the north-east, both as a percentage of total projects and in terms of numbers of jobs promised in the periods (i) June 1987 to the most recently available date and (ii) January 1989 to the most recently available date.

Mr. Leigh: The table sets out the number of investment decisions known to the Invest in Britain Bureau from 1 July 1987 to 31 December 1990 and from 1 January 1989 to 31 December 1990 for Scotland, Wales and the north-east. The numbers of jobs expected to be created from such projects and the percentage share of both projects and jobs as part of the total for the United Kingdom as a whole is also given.

The decisions recorded include the establishment of new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and take no account of subsequent developments.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 March 1991]: Statistics in this area are not separately identified in "Overseas Trade Statistics"—standard international trade classification division 00.

RECHAR

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from organisations seeking full additionality within the regions for the RECHAR programme.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: My right hon. Friends and I have received a number of representations from Members of Parliament, local authorities and the Coalfield Communities Campaign on various aspects of the proposed RECHAR programmes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what allocations of RECHAR funds to the United Kingdom have been withheld by the Community on grounds of lack of additionality.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: European Commission decisions are awaited on applications made in July 1990 for RECHAR grants of £109 million from European Community funds to United Kingdom coalfield areas. As is usual with applications for grants from the European Community structural funds, discussions with the Commission are proceeding on various aspects of them.

Structural Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a breakdown of the claims made, by year from 1987, for each EC structural fund operational programme area, compared with the allocation awarded to each programme within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: Fifty current operational programmes have to date been approved by the Commission for the United Kingdom. Details of the claims made for each of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that EC structural fund support for the regions of the EC has an additional economic impact in those regions;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure that local authority spending of EC structural funds is exempt from current United Kingdom capital and revenue controls to ensure that there is a net benefit to regions with severe economic structural problems in receiving EC support.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: Expected levels of receipts from the European Community structural funds, as of other receipts from the Community, are taken into account when the Government decide the size of United Kingdom public expenditure programmes. Structural fund grants to local authorities are paid in full to the authorities concerned.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a detailed breakdown of how much of the EC structural fund support designated for programmes to take place in the eligible United Kingdom regions has been spent on United Kingdom Government Department schemes of assistance.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: The Community support frameworks agreed between the Government and the European Commission do not in general specify in detail the Departments and other authorities whose measures the European Community structural funds will support. Until each operational programme has been concluded it is not possible to say how the expenditure from it has been allocated.

Regional Policy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to review the effectiveness of United Kingdom regional policy.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 March 1991]: My Department has an on-going programme for reviewing all schemes of support to industry, including regional policy instruments. A second-stage evaluation of regional enterprise grants was published earlier this month by HMSO, and a report on the evaluation of regional selective assistance covering the period 1980 to 1984 was published last year.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies employed on behalf of his Department to give advice, or to undertake other work on public relations and similar matters, during the Gulf crisis; if he will indicate the amount of money spent on remuneration for the companies involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The only companies employed by the Ministry of Defence on work on public relations and similar matters during the Gulf crisis have been employed to provide administrative support services, such as transcription services and provision of press cuttings. Principal among these companies have been the Broadcast Monitoring Company and Lincoln Hannah Ltd.

Details of payments to individual companies are generally a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any employees of British defence companies were sent to the Gulf region to provide assistance to the armed forces as part of Operation Granby.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate number of (a) combat and (b) non-combat sorties carried out by the Royal Air Force as a part of Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF flew over 4,000 combat and 2,500 non-combat sorties from the commencement of the air campaign until the cessation of hostilities. Some 9,000 sorties were also flown in support of Operation Granby prior to 17 January 1991, 8,000 by combat aircraft and 1,000 by non-combat aircraft.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the role of British industry in supporting Operation Granby.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom defence industry responded admirably to our requirements during all stages of Operation Granby.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of (a) British and (b) coalition casualities involved in Operation Granby; and if he will make a statement detailing the numbers killed or wounded and whether these casualties resulted from combat or non-combat operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Twenty-five service men are confirmed to have been killed and 43 injured in action. A further 19 have been killed in non-combat accidents in the Gulf since 2 August 1990. Her Majesty's Government are not in a position to provide information on casualties sustained by coalition partners.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate amount and type of ordnance delivered by the Royal Air Force as part of Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF delivered over 3,000 tonnes of ordnance during the air campaign in support of operations in the Gulf. This total comprised over 100 JP233 airfield denial weapons, some 6,000 bombs, of which over 1,000 were laser-guided, over 100 anti-radar missiles and nearly 700 air-to-ground rockets.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's assessment of the number of Kuwaiti civilians seized and taken to Iraq between 2 August 1990 and the cessation of hostilities;

(2) what is his Department's assessment of the number of Kuwaitis seized by the Iraqi forces between 2 August 1990 and the cessation of hostilities that are still unaccounted for.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We understand that the total number of missing Kuwaitis is estimated at 33,000. This is made up of 6,000 prisoners of war, 5,000 Kuwaitis who are known to have been taken to Iraq, and 22,000 whose fate is still unknown. The Kuwaiti authorities have established registration centres to enable Kuwaiti families to give details of missing persons.

Site Security

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the level of security at the sites of his Department's main contractors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what level of security at the sites of his Department's main contractors, relative to that of his Department's sites, his Department requires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At defence contractors' sites the level of security required by the Ministry of Defence depends on the nature and classification of the contracts. Where appropriate, the MOD satisfied itself that its security requirements are met before work begins on the contract. Thereafter such contractors' sites are inspected regularly, the continuing adequacy of security arrangements is assessed and, where necessary, improvements are made.

The MOD is directly responsible for all aspects of security at all its own establishments. These establishments are inspected regularly, security arrangements are assessed and, where necessary, improvements are made.

Europe

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions his Department has been involved with regarding military confidence-building measures in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The continuing negotiations on confidence and security-building measures in Europe resumed in Vienna on 4 February. The Ministry of Defence is fully involved in these negotiations, although the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead Department on these and other arms control matters.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide for each local authority the level of rates payable in 1989-90 below which a ratepaying couple who have not subsequently moved house might expect in 1991-92 to benefit from the community charge reduction scheme.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for a table of the information requested, based on the community charges for 1991-92 so far reported to the Department, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, for each local authority in England and Wales, the proportion of revenue raised by the rating system or community charge as a percentage of total local authority expenditure.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for a table of the estimates for local authorities in England for 1988-89 and 1989-90 to be placed in the Library of the House. For 1990-91, community charge income is paid into the collection fund of the charging authority and, together with revenue support grant and receipts from the non-domestic rates pool, finances the spending of both charging and precepting authorities. It is not therefore possible to relate the community charge income of the collection fund to the expenditure of any particular authority.

Figures for authorities in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the year on year increase in percentage terms, in standard spending assessment for 1991-92 for each metropolitan district and London borough.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 March 1991]: The figures requested are given in the following table:

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what would be the level of community charge in Kent for 1990-91 if the amount of revenue support grant, or its equivalent, paid to local authorities had been maintained at its 1978-79 level in real terms;

(2) what would be the level of community charge in Calderdale for 1990-91 if the amount of revenue support grant, or its equivalent, paid to local authorities had been maintained at its 1978-79 level in real terms.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) on Thursday 14 March, Official Report, column 670.

Council Housing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, in the Official Report (a) the total, for each authority, of homes owned by the council at 1 January 1980, (b) the total sold to tenants under the right-to-buy legislation and other voluntary processes since 1 January 1980 to the latest date for which figures are available and (c) the percentage (b) represents of (a) for the London boroughs of Camden, Islington, Lambeth, Southwark and Wandsworth, the metropolitan boroughs of Liverpool, Manchester, Sheffield and Birmingham and the districts of Nottingham and Bristol, and each of the districts of Cornwall, Devon and Somerset.

Mr. Yeo: A table giving the available information on sales for each English local authority was placed in the Library on Wednesday 30 January 1991—Official Report, column 542.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of people made homeless due to mortgage repossessions since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of households accepted under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985 where the main immediate reason for homelessness is mortgage arrears, but do not distinguish those who were actually subject to repossession. Estimates are as follows:

Year	England
1981	3,500
1982	4,200
1983	4,700
1984	6,100
1985	8,300
1986	10,070
1987	10,460
1988	8,340
1989	8,360
1990	13,470

Urban Renewal Grant

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the range of projects funded by urban renewal grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Key: In addition to the resources made available through local authorities' housing investment programme allocations and capital receipts, my Department provides specific resources under the group of urban and housing programmes as follows:

	1990-91 £ million
Urban programme	232·6
City grant approved	49·5
Derelict land grant	73·5
Urban development corporations	553·9
City action teams	7·8
Estate action	190·0

In addition, resources totalling £165 million are available in 1990-91 to help the homeless through local authority and housing association schemes, the rough sleepers initiative and grants to voluntary organisations offering advice and support.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what projects in Wandsworth have received funding from the urban renewal grant; and what is the total value of the grants.

Mr. Key: My Department has provided specific resources in Wandsworth as follows:

	1990-91 £ million
Urban programme	2·5
City grant approved	0·4
Homelessness	3·1

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments will be made or have been made to Mr. D. A. Turnbull arising out of the sale of TCS to the management buy-out with which the person to whom the Government are considering selling the transport section of the Crown Suppliers is connected.

Mr. Yeo: Payments totalling £36,000 have been made by my Department to members of Mr. Pinkney's team in support of fees they incurred up to December 1990 for advice from D. A. Turnbull and Co. Mr. Turnbull is corresponding with the Department about support for subsequent fees for the team's advisers.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all TCS contracts let by his Department connected in any way with Mr. D. A. Turnbull complied with civil service procurement rules.

Mr. Yeo: Yes.

Housing Associations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on funding lesbian and gay housing associations.

Mr. Yeo: To be eligible for public funding for housing activities, a housing association must be registered with the Housing Corporation. Responsibility for registration rests in statute with the corporation. I am, however, not aware that there are any registered associations which meet the hon. Member's description.

Derelict Land, Leicestershire

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent in Government grants on derelict land, following the closure of coal mines, in north-west Leicestershire since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Since 1979, payments of derelict land grant totalling £2,496,884 have been authorised for schemes for the reclamation of former collieries in Leicestershire, North-West.

Gulf Oil Fires

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the evidence on which he has based his statement, Official Report, 15 March, column 1389, on the impact of oil fires.

Mr. Baldry: The long-term environmental damage arising from acid rain in parts of Europe results from cumulative deposition over very many years, combined with sensitive geology. Neither of these factors applies in the Gulf region, and it is therefore to be hoped that long-term damage will be slight.

Water Supply

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many relaxations have been authorised under the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 12 March, Official Report, column 476.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are (a) the average cost per person of Government provision towards local government services and (b) individual community charges in each district in Devon in 1991-92;

(2) what is the support per person given by central Government to (a) Lambeth and (b) North Devon; and what is the community charge of each for the year 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The available information is given in the table. If Parliament enacts the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill, new average community charges will be £140 lower, with a consequent increase in central Government support.

	Total external support[1] 1991-92 £/head	Average community charge 1991-92 £/head
East Devon	456	383
Exeter	491	377
Mid Devon	472	394
North Devon	479	[2]—
Plymouth	510	380
South Hams	465	380
Teignbridge	466	405
Torbay	475	380
Torridge	514	346
West Devon	468	370
Lambeth	1,557	590

[1] Total external support includes revenue support grant, receipts from the non-domestic rates pool, area protection grant and Inner London education grant. Information on other central Government support (specific grants, community charge reduction scheme, and community charge benefits) will not be available until authorities send in their detailed budget returns to the Department.

[2] Not available.

Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of research projects (a) currently being undertaken or (b) commissioned by his Department; and if he will list the subjects of research and dates for publication in each case.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department is currently managing just over 1,000 research contracts on environmental protection, planning, local government, housing and construction. These contracts are expected to produce a corresponding number of reports over the next two years. It would not be practicable to list the expected publication date of each.

Transport Museum, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the negotiations regarding the city grant application to assist the development of the transport museum site at Low Moor, Bradford.

Mr. Key: There is as yet no city grant application for the Low Moor site. However, a proposal for a mixed leisure and commercial development on this site has been submitted to the Department for a preliminary view on its suitability for city grant. The proposal is currently under discussion between the Department's city grant team and the scheme's promoters.

Milton Keynes Development Corporation

Mr. Benyon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the wind-up of the Milton Keynes development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Following careful consideraiton of the representations received in the course of our consultation under section 41 of the New Towns Act 1981, I have decided that Milton Keynes development corporation should be wound up on the target date of 31 March 1992. The necessary order will be made in due course.

It is important that Milton Keynes be brought to completion to the high standards established by the development corporation and that inward investment and promotion of the city continue. The Commission for the New Towns has much experience in handling the completion of development, and I am confident that it has the flexibility to meet the particular and acknowledged needs of Milton Keynes. I am asking the commission to pay special attention to balanced development to continuing high standards at Milton Keynes and to inward investment there. I am also asking the commission to move towards the establishment there of a new promotion agency, in conjunction with the local authorities and the private sector. This agency will have a dedicated budget.

Urban Renewal Grants

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the range of projects funded by urban renewal grants in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Key [holding answer 18 March 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox).

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what projects in Salford have received funding from the urban renewal grant; and what is the total value of the grants.

Mr. Key [holding answer 18 March 1991]: My Department has provided specific resources in Salford as follows:

	1990-91 £ million
Urban programme	6·9
City grant approved	5·3
Derelict land grant	1·8
Manchester/Salford city action team	0·9
Estate action	3·7

In addition, the designated areas of Trafford Park development corporation covers a small area of Salford borough; the development corporation's total provision in 1990-91 is £24·2 million.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the capital debt for each local authority (a) at the latest available date and (b) five years previously and the amount of interest paid in the intervening period; and if he will total the figures regionally and nationally.

Mr. Key [holding answer 19 March 1991]: The available information has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Standard Community Charges

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, columns 478-79, relating to standard poll tax payers; if he will now give the comparable figures for Bolton; and how many standard charges are attributed to second homes in (a) Wigan, (b) Salford, (c) Westminster and (d) Bolton.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 March 1991]: Bolton's return to my Department gives the number of properties subject to a standard community charge at 1 June 1990 to be "not available". In any case, no information can be provided in the terms sought. The fact that a property may give rise to the standard charge does not indicate whether it is kept as a second home or is empty for some other reason.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the additional costs grant arising from the abolition of ILEA to each of the London local authorities (a) in 1990-91 and (b) for 1991-92.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 March 1991]: The amounts payable by way of inner London education grants are as follows:

	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
City of London	210,000	147,000
Camden	6,781,169	4,792,075
Greenwich	11,344,514	7,852,451
Hackney	6,523,011	4,872,854
Hammersmith and Fulham	6,812,046	4,951,567
Islington	7,840,576	5,342,227
Kensington and Chelsea	3,693,725	2,416,962
Lambeth	9,475,207	6,691,718
Lewisham	10,565,150	7,375,779
Southwark	9,479,967	6,469,667
Tower Hamlets	9,102,152	5,910,136
Wandsworth	10,974,086	7,970,026
Westminster	7,198,397	5,207,538

Dumplington

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to local authorities as regards an acceptable time scale for the determination of a planning application; what target time scale he sets for determination of planning issues within his Department; what is the average length of time taken by his Department to arrive at a decision on such applications following the completion of a public inquiry; and why it has now taken more than three years in the case of the application for a regional shopping centre at Dumplington, Trafford Park, Manchester.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have set local authorities the target of deciding 80 per cent. of planning applications within eight weeks.

The Department has a target of determining 80 per cent. of those planning applications which are called in for the Secretary of State's decision within 13 weeks from the date on which the inspector's report is received. The target for planning appeals which are recovered for the Secretary of State's decision, rather than being transferred to a planning inspector for decision, is to determine 80 per cent. within eight weeks of receiving the inspector's report. Of cases decided in 1990, 64 per cent. of called-in applications were decided within 13 weeks; 59 per cent. of recovered appeals were decided within eight weeks.

Occasionally, decisions take substantially longer because the scale or nature of the proposed development raises complex issues. I understand the frustration caused by the long delay in issuing the decision on two called-in applications and an appeal relating to the Dumplington scheme. This has been caused by the need to consider carefully the comments made by the parties about the access proposals. As I said in reply to my hon. Friend on 11 February, I cannot yet forecast when it will be possible to decide these cases. I will write to interested parties as soon as I can.

Litter, Motorways

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his answer of 13 March, if he will list the starting and completion dates of litter collection from each section of motorway for the last year for which figures are available; if he will take steps to ensure that embankments and verges are cleared; and whether any prosecutions for littering of motorways have been successful.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Litter collection from motorways is undertaken by the Department's agents in conjunction with other highway maintenance functions. Separate information about starting and finishing dates for litter collection is not available.

The provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which will come into force on 1 April this year, will require litter clearance to specified standards from highways including embankments and verges.

Records of successful prosecutions for littering do not distinguish motorways from other areas. In 1988, there were 1,607 convictions for littering under the Litter Act 1983, and in 1989 there were 2,174.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Safety

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to review the legislation relating to corporate responsibility, liability and accountability for public safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department keeps under review any issues which may affect the safety of consumers and the responsibility of suppliers of consumer products to ensure that their products are reasonably safe. The relevant legislation is the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and I have no immediate plans to undertake a review of the Act.

Profit Sharing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what new incentives for profit sharing his Department plans to offer to British companies.

Mr. Redwood: A number of tax incentives are operated by the Inland Revenue. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a number of improvements to them in his Budget statement, including profit-related pay, save-as-you-earn, employee share ownership trusts and personal equity plans.

WALES

Steel Industry

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total job losses in the steel industry in Wales in each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. David Hunt: Comprehensive information detailing separately the number of jobs lost or created in the steel industry is not available. The following table shows the number of persons employed in the steel industry in Wales at the end of December each year.

	Number of employees
1979	55,300
1980	34,700
1981	27,100
1982	24,600
1983	22,300

Speech Therapy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, following the recent determination on appeal that speech therapy should be regarded as an educational provision for certain children, he has given any guidance to local education authorities in Wales on the implementation of the Education Act 1981 and the provision of statements of special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Welsh Office circular 54/89 on "Assessments and Statements of Special Educational Needs" gives guidance to local education authorities on the implementation of the Education Act 1981 and the provision of statements. It also advises on the need for local education authorities to work closely with district health authorities and social services departments on the provision of non-educational services.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes concerning fallen animals: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: As I indicated to the hon. Gentleman when I wrote to him on 18 February 1991, the difficulties being experienced in respect of the disposal of fallen animals arise primarily from changes in the market for rendered products. In the Government's view, this is largely a problem for the market to resolve. Nevertheless, the state veterinary service continues to monitor the situation. It, with the National Rivers Authority and local authorities, can provide advice to farmers about the disposal of fallen animals. Research which could lead to an improvement in the market for rendered products continues, and the recycling of animal waste has been identified as a priority area for EC assistance under regulation 866/90.

Open-heart Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the number of open-heart surgery operations carried out at the University hospital of Wales to reach (a) 650, (b) 700, (c) 750 and (d) 800.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: An increase in the number of open-heart operations for adults at the University hospital of Wales to the target of 800 yearly is presently under consideration with South Glamorgan health authority, reflecting the substantial central investment to upgrade coronary and intensive care facilities and cardiac catheter laboratories at the hospital and projected achievements in 1990-91.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of open-heart surgery operations carried out in Wales in 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information for 1970 and 1975 is not readily available or directly comparable. From information provided by health authorities I understand that, in addition to 129 open-heart operations secured for patients from Wales under contractual arrangements with hospitals in England during 1990 and funded centrally by the Welsh Office, the number of open-heart operations reported to have been carried out in Wales is:

	Number
1985	576
1990	637

Farm Aid Conservation Grants

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant applications under the farm aid conservation grant scheme have been refused in the last two years; and if he will list the numbers refused under each main ground for refusal.

Mr. David Hunt: In Wales, since the farm and conservation grant scheme was introduced in February 1989, a total of 134 claims have been rejected and 2,099 claims authorised for payment up to the end of February 1991. Claims will have been rejected for a breach of either the statutory requirements or the administrative rules of the scheme. I understand that the vast majority have been rejected for breaching statutory requirements.

Minister's Flat, Cathays Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 18 March, column 34, whether he took account of the country of origin, when purchasing the bed linen, microwave oven, television set and video recorder for the Secretary of State's flat at the Crown buildings, Cathays Park, Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: These were purchases made locally seeking value for money. Most of the items were manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, pursuant to his answers of 18 March, column 34, standard community charge is payable to Cardiff city council in the respect of the Secretary of State's flat at the Crown buildings, Cathays Park, Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: Community charge payments are not appropriate as the flat forms part of the non-domestic value of the Cathays Park building. However, contributions are made through non-domestic rate support.

Artificial Joints

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current cost of a replacement (a) knee and (b) hip operation carried out under specific earmarked Welsh Office contract funds at the treatment centre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Current costs at the treatment centre, including all fixed and variable costs, are £2,463 for a hip replacement and £3,163 for a knee replacement.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the numbers of adults in Wales waiting for replacement (i) hips and (ii) knees for periods of more than four months (a) in the last full year before the setting-up of the treatment centre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar and (b) the present year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is not collected in the form requested, although it was estimated, at July 1989, that some 935 patients were waiting four months or more for hip and knee replacement operations.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the length of the four months plus waiting list for artificial (a) knees and (b) hips for the year 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not collected in the form requested.

Pollution Control

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that in the case of pollution control projects, grant aid approval will not be refused to farmers who have set about urgent remedial works, eligible for grant, in response to requests from the National Rivers Authority or any other regulatory body.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It has always been our policy to pay grant on claims which comply with the terms of the relevant grant scheme.

Aston Day Centre

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure the continued running of the Deeside day centre at Aston.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is for the local statutory agencies concerned to decide whether or not they wish to provide funds for the centre.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce the future arrangements for allocating revenue funds to district health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Health authorities were consulted in January on options for a weighted capitation formula to be used to determine each authority's share of revenue resources. Copies of the consultation paper "Implementing the White Paper: Options for a Weighted Capitation Revenue Resource Allocation Formula" are in the Library of the House.

After considering the responses from authorities, I have decided that the most appropriate basis for the formula is as set out in option 4 of the consultation paper. This option takes account of the review of the relationships between morbidity, social deprivation and health needs carried out for the Department by Dr. Carr-Hill of York university. Copies of his review were circulated with the consultation document and are in the Library of the House. I shall also be arranging for it to be published. The formula retains the weighting for sparsity included in the existing revenue assessment formula. This is in recognition of the additional costs of providing services to scattered populations in rural areas.

Each DHA's share of resources, according to the formula, compared with its share of gross discretionary recurrent revenue resources for 1991-92, is shown in the table:

	Percentage share of revenue funding
	1991-92	Formula share
Clwyd	13·52	14·24
East Dyfed	9·02	8·77
Gwent	14·87	15·20
Gwynedd	8·18	8·78
Mid Glamorgan	19·14	19·05
Pembrokeshire	3·68	3·87
Powys	4·76	4·15
South Glamorgan	14·00	13·09
West Glamorgan	12·83	12·86

Health authorities will need time to adjust to their new formula shares and there is also some uncertainty about the effect of revised population estimates following the 1991 census on formula shares. For these reasons the allocations of most authorities will, subject to any centrally funded service developments, be maintained at their current level, after allowing for inflation, until 1993-94; and only those shown to be more than 2 per cent. below their formula target level of funding will benefit from discretionary growth funding. From 1994-95 to 1998-99, I presently intend that district health authorities' allocations will be adjusted in equal steps, so that each authority will receive its formula share of funds by 1998-99. The need for a faster or slower pace of change than this will be reconsidered in 1993 when the 1993-94 allocations are announced. Factors that I will take into account will be the effects of revised population estimates and the extent to which equalisation will have been achieved as a result of the differential distribution of growth funding in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

On this basis and, I must stress, for planning purposes only, the percentage changes in discretionary funding that authorities might anticipate over the next 10 years are as follows:

Annual change in revenue resources as a percentage of previous year's allocation at constant prices

	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96	1996-97	1997-98	1998-99	1999-2000	Year 2000-01
Clwyd	1·28	1·25	1·17	1·17	1·17	1·17	1·16	0·45	0·45
East Dyfed	0·00	0·00	0·05	0·05	0·05	0·05	0·05	0·45	0·45
Gwent	0·53	0·59	0·84	0·84	0·84	0·84	0·84	0·45	0·45
Gwynedd	1·76	1·67	1·39	1·38	1·38	1·37	1·36	0·45	0·45
Mid Glamorgan	0·00	0·00	0·52	0·52	0·53	0·53	0·53	0·45	0·45
Pembroke	1·20	1·18	1·14	1·14	1·14	1·13	1·13	0·45	0·45
Powys	0·00	0·00	−1·97	−2·02	−2·08	−2·14	−2·21	0·45	0·45
South Glamorgan	0·00	0·00	−0·70	−0·71	−0·72	−0·73	−0·75	0·45	0·45
West Glamorgan	0·00	0·00	0·66	0·66	0·66	0·67	0·67	0·45	0·45

This assumes 0·5 per cent. per annum real terms growth in overall discretionary revenue provision, exclusive of capital charges element, in line with resource planning assumptions previously issued to DHAs. However, resultant figures above are expressed as a percentage of total revenue allocations—with capital charges element added back in.

The table shows that there will be a redistribution of resources with the allocations of two authorities, Powys and South Glamorgan, being reduced to their capitation shares after 1993-94, subject to the review in 1993. The changes affect the purchasing positions of health authorities, but the provision of services will depend on where purchasers choose to place their contracts. The future of individual hospitals will therefore not always depend on the relative funding position of the authorities in which they are located.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the social fund allocations for 1991-92 to each of his offices in Glasgow.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 19 March, Official Report, column 68.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his reply of 6 March, Official Report, columns 170-71, he will provide a breakdown of the figures for the cost of incentives in the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 between people opting into (a) personal pensions or (b) schemes, giving the numbers involved in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government Actuary's estimates are as follows:

	Great Britain
Year	Incentives to personal pensions	Schemes	Number eligible for incentive in personal pensions	Schemes
		£ billion		million
1987-88	0·3	—	3·1	—
1988-89	0·35	0·06	3·1	0·5
1989-90	0·5	0·1	4·0	0·75

The amounts paid are shown against the year to which they relate rather than the year in which payment was made.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what it would cost to raise the state pension of (a) a single person to £60 per week and (b) a married couple to £96 per week; and by how much the basic rate of income tax would have to rise to produce the sums required.

Miss Widdecombe: It would cost an extra £3·6 billion to increase the basic state retirement pension from the 1991-92 levels to those suggested. State retirement pensions are paid from the national insurance fund and not by general taxation, so a rise in these pensions of this amount would imply an increase in national insurance contributions of £2·50 per week for an employee on average male earnings and the same amount for his employer.

Claimants (Tyne and Wear)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of (a) supplementary benefit, (b) supplementary pension and (c) income support there were in each constituency of the county of Tyne and Wear in May 1979 and at present.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. However, it is possible to identify the number of claimants in the categories above in the three local offices serving the Tyne and Wear area:

(a) Supplementary Benefit[3]	27,910	[4]—
(b) Supplementary Pension	14,910	[4]—
(c) Income Support	[4]—	39,620

[1] Data derived from Quarterly Statistical Enquiry of 15 May 1979.
[2] Data derived from 28 February 1991 count of cases in action, which include a number where payment has ceased but other action is continuing. Data is provisional and subject to amendment.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider proposing to power companies the joint publicising of the cold weather payment scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 14 March, Official Report, columns 669-70.

Crisis Loans, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what instructions have been issued to local offices in Bradford regarding the consideration of applications for crisis loans from young single people; if he will ensure that such applications are dealt with immediately; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The guidance issued by the Secretary of State about considering applications for crisis loans is published in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

Local guidance concerning priorities to be met from the local loans budgets makes no differentiation between ages of applicants. In making decisions, social fund officers take into account the law, the Secretary of State's directions and guidance, and local managers' guidance on priorities, in the light of the individual applicant's needs and circumstances.

Applications satisfying the criteria for crisis loans are cleared on the day of receipt.

SCOTLAND

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of his Ministers has been given responsibility for energy use by his Department; and what is his brief regarding energy efficiency.

Mr. Ian Lang: My hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart), the Under-Secretary of State responsible for industry and local government in the Scottish Office, is also responsible for matters concerning energy. As regards energy efficiency, his brief is the same as that of the other members of the ministerial group on energy efficiency which was announced in the White Paper on the Environment on 25 September. The group is chaired by the Secretary of State for Energy. Its aim is to raise the profile of energy efficiency by working with Government Departments, local authorities and organisations representing energy users in all sectors of the economy to stimulate improvements. The group will also monitor the Government's energy efficiency programmes and the new initiatives announced in the White Paper on the environment and assess the need for further action.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which regions the urban programme has funded nursery schools; and if he will list each approved project with the cost and number of places.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The urban programme funds a wide variety of projects aimed at pre-school children and their families in the most deprived urban areas in Scotland. The table lists projects which have been funded since 1979 where the urban programme has specifically provided nursery school places.

Mr. Marc Ellington

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the sums paid to Mr. Marc Ellington for professional services by the Historic Buildings Council and Historic Buildings and Monuments in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Members of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland receive no salary or fee for their services. Mr. Marc Ellington has received no payments for professional services from Historic Buildings and Monuments during the past 10 years. In 1985, Historic Buildings and Monuments commissioned, at a cost of £6,900, a public information video from Soundcraft, a company of which Mr. Marc Ellington is a partner.

Police (Scotland) Act

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will lay before Parliament a consolidated and classified abstract of statistics collected under section 47 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 for the years since 1982.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: "Scottish Criminal Statistics 1983-1988" (Cm 1475) was laid before Parliament yesterday and will be published today. The information for these years contained therein has already been issued in Scottish Office Home and Health Department statistical bulletins, copies of which were sent to all Scottish Members, and placed in the Library at the time of issue.

When there is a suitable legislative opportunity, we intend to bring forward an amendment of the present statutory requirement to publish a consolidated and classified abstract of criminal statistics to reflect the current practice of providing earlier statistical bulletins on particular topics.

Housing

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress was made in the year to 31 March 1990 in bringing houses in Scotland up to the tolerable standard; what number of houses he estimates to fall below that standard; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities estimate that, in the year to 31 March 1990, 10,507 houses were brought up to the statutory tolerable standard and a small number were closed for occupation or demolished. This is a very substantial increase over the numbers reported as being improved in previous years, although figures may not be comparable for the reasons given below.

Until results become available from the national house condition survey, on which field work begins this year, it is not possible to offer a reliable estimate of the number of houses in Scotland below the tolerable standard (BTS). The information available to me on BTS houses is drawn from returns made by local housing authorities, giving their estimates of the number of houses in their district which fail to meet the standard as at 31 March each year. Local authorities have a statutory duty to assess the condition of the stock in their districts. The Government encourage local authorities to carry out local house condition surveys to improve their information base and in June 1988 issued detailed guidance on the conduct of surveys.

By 31 March 1990, 14 local surveys had been carried out. It appears that the results have led several authorities to revise upwards their previous figures of BTS houses. The number of houses reported as BTS on 31 March 1990 is 81,049, of which we estimate some 20 per cent. to be unoccupied. The returns for each local authority are set out in the table. The reported total represents an apparent increase of 25,151 on the published estimate for 31 March 1989. Most authorities reporting high percentage increases between these dates had completed local surveys by the end of March 1990. This, with the reported substantial increase in the number of BTS houses improved over the 12-month period, suggests that the reported increase in the Scottish total in the year to 31 March 1990 results from changes in the basis of measurement and does not indicate any sudden worsening in the condition of the housing stock.

A further 15 local authorities have now carried out, or are in the process of carrying out, local surveys and 10 more are understood to be planning surveys. As more authorities take account of survey results, there may be further revisions of the basis of their BTS returns, possibly leading to further reported increases in the BTS total. Direct comparisons of estimates compiled on the basis of survey results with those submitted previously by the same authorities, or with those compiled by other authorities without the benefit of local house condition surveys, are unlikely to be valid. A new statistical framework or series may be necessary and Scottish Office officials will consider the technical issues arising with representatives of local authorities.

Our policies and the level of financial provision for housing already recognise the need for substantial investment in houses in need of improvement and repair, including houses not previously classified as being below the tolerable standard. In the five years to 1989-90, a total of 330,200 houses have been improved in the public sector, and 156,200 in the private sector with the aid of grant. At the local level it is for individual local authorities to set their own priorities for housing, but section 85 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 places a duty on them to take action on BTS houses and we expect them to have full regard to that duty in administering the improvement and repair grant system, in determining investment priorities for their own stock, and in the use of the other appropriate statutory powers at their disposal. Scottish Homes will also play an important part in improving BTS houses in certain rural areas, and has identified this as one of the main priorities of its rural strategy.

Leukaemia

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report of the case study of leukaemia in the Dounreay area, recommended by the second report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report will be published tomorrow in the British Medical Journal and copies will be available in the House. The report, commissioned by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department, prepared by the information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency, concludes that the observed excess incidence of childhood leukaemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma—NHL—in the area within 25 km of Dounreay cannot be explained by paternal exposure to ionising radiation prior to conception. The authors point out that an apparent association between the use of beaches by the children in the vicinity of Dounreay and the incidence of childhood leukaemia and NHL should be treated with caution.

COMARE has stated in its advice that these results taken alone do not suggest paternal employment at Dounreay nuclear establishment as a factor in the causation of childhood leukaemia/NHL in the neighbourhood and indeed make it clear that such employment cannot be a full explanation of the excess incidence observed in the vicinity of Dounreay. However, the statistical power of the study is inevitably very low and the study cannot refute the suggestion from the study of Gardner et al, that fathers' recorded external radiation dose may be related to the incidence of leukaemia/NHL in their offspring.

The Dounreay study has been referred to the independent expert Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE). The text of its advice, which the Government have accepted, is as follows:

COMARE Statement of Advice

Results of a case control study of leukaemia and non Hodgkins Lymphoma in children in Caithness near the Dounreay nuclear installation—Urquhart J. D., Black R. J., Muirhead M. J., Sharp L., Maxwell M., Eden O. B., Adams Jones D.

Background

1. In 1988 COMARE published its second report "Investigation of the possible increased incidence of leukaemia in young people near the Dounreay Nuclear Establishment, Caithness, Scotland" (1). The report made eight recommendations to Government. The first of these concerned a case control study of young people registered as cases of leukaemia or lymphoma in the Dounreay area. The study was commissioned by the Scottish Home and Health Department in 1988 and was undertaken by the Information and Statistics Division of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service in conjunction with the Department of Paediatric Haematology, Royal Hospital for Sick Children Edinburgh. DN The findings have now been published in the British Medical Journal (2).

2. The authors' stated objective was "To examine whether the observed excess of childhood leukaemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in the area around the Dounreay Nuclear Installation is associated with established risk factors or with factors related to the plant or with parental occupation in the nuclear industry".

3. The Minister of State at the Scottish Home and Health Department referred the results of the studies to COMARE for consideration and advice.

The Study

4. The authors ascertained 14 cases of leukaemia or non-Hodgkin's lymphoma (NHL) in under 15 year olds, resident in Caithness, registered between 1968 and 1986. Controls were matched for date of birth and mother's place of residence at child's birth (either within 25km of Dounreay or within the remainder of Caithness). Data from birth certificates and parental employment records from the nuclear industry were analysed for 13 cases and 47 controls. Questionnaire data were analysed for 11 cases and 36 controls.

5. In an attempt to explain the excess incidence of leukaemia and NHL in the Dounreay area, particularly between 1979 and 1986, the authors examined possible associations with a variety of factors relating to the child and/or the child's parents. These included parental occupation, age and social class, maternal birth place, family medical history, pregnancy history, possible exposure to non-ionising radiation and various aspects of lifestyle.

6. The study found that none of the cases of leukaemia or NHL had been exposed ante natally to diagnostic x-rays. In the analysis of parental occupation, children with leukaemia or NHL in either the immediate vicinity of Dounreay or in the rest of Caithness were found to be no more likely to have fathers who were, or had been employed in the nuclear industry, than were control children without malignant disease.

7. In the analysis of many other factors, the only associations to achieve statistical significance were the use of local beaches by case children in the years prior to diagnosis and the receipt of prescription medication by case mothers when pregnant. However, no two case mothers received the same medication.

COMARE's advice to Government

8. COMARE has considered this study and our advice is set out below.

General Considerations

9. In our second report [1] we noted the considerable problems in interpretation of findings based on very small numbers of cases. As there were only 11 cases for the questionnaire based study, and 13 for the birth certificate/employment record study any conclusion drawn from these results remains open to some uncertainty. It is not possible to assess whether interpretation of parts of the data may have been biased by the unavoidable exclusion of three cases from the questionnaire study or by the use of retrospective questionnaire data based on parental recall or by some of the difficulties in recruiting controls.

10. Nevertheless, the study was justified by the need to elucidate factors of possible relevance to the excess incidence of childhood leukaemia/NHL in the vicinity of the Dounreay Nuclear Establishment (DNE). In addition there is a need to accumulate information from areas around several nuclear sites as part of our overall strategy for evaluting possible causes of childhood malignancy in those areas.

11. Therefore, we have considered the results of this study in terms of whether it can provide a statistical explanation for the excess of childhood leukaemia in the Dounreay locality specifically, and in the wider context of other published studies. We have given particular consideration to how the results relate to those of the similar study undertaken by Gardner et al in West Cumbria [3].

Methodology

12. The Committee consider that the methods of investigation were appropriate to the aims of the study.

Results

13. The authors observe that for children resident within 25 km of Dounreay, only 2 of 8 cases (25 per cent.) of leukaemia/NHL had fathers employed at DNE at any time compared with 12 of 25 controls (48 per cent.). These results, taken alone, do not suggest paternal employment at DNE as a factor in the causation of childhood leukaemia/NHL in the neighbourhood and indeed make it clear that such employment cannot be a full explanation of the excess incidence observed in the vicinity of Dounreay. However, the statistical power of the study is inevitably very low and the study cannot refute the suggestion from the study of Gardner et al [3], that fathers' recorded external radiation dose may be related to the incidence of leukaemia/NHL in their offspring.

14. We note the finding of an apparent association between the use of the beaches in the proximity of Dounreay by children and the development of leukaemia/NHL. We advise that this finding should be interpreted with considerable caution since:

14.1 it relates to five cases only;

14.2 it is based on parental recall some years after the event which may be subject to human error;

14.3 the only comparable study [3] did not produce a similar result;

14.4 information, currently available, on the levels of radioactivity on the beaches, suggests that these are far too low to cause leukaemia on the basis of accepted models of leukaemogenesis.

Nevertheless, we will incorporate a review of the Dounreay beach monitoring data into our future work programme.

15. Data on proximity of home address to the microwave communications installation outside Thurso were analysed for those 8 cases living within 25 km of Dounreay and 25 controls. We agree broadly with the authors' conclusion that the results of this analysis do not support the hypothesis that the microwave transmitter could be a source of risk. However, we will subject the matter to more detailed investigation with respect to the possible spread and power of the beam and its relation to places of residence of cases and controls.

General conclusions

16. We consider that this study does not identify an explanation for the excess of childhood leukaemia/NHL around Dounreay. The disparity beteween these findings and those of Gardner et al in Cumbria tends to weaken but does not exclude the suggestion that these two excesses have a similar causation. At the same time, the findings in this small study fail to support but do not negate the suggestion of an association between paternal employment in the nuclear industry and leukaemia/NHL in children. We would reiterate the views expressed in the final conclusion of our 2nd report [1]. These were that the evidence of a raised incidence of leukaemia near Dounreay, taken in conjunction with that relating to the area round Sellafield is sufficient to warrant an intensified programme of investigation.

17. We undertake to update our advice on these issues as further relevant research data become available.

Health Service

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Greater Glasgow health board about the effect on service provision of further reductions of income due to SHARE—Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation—parity adjustments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 March 1991]: The Government's policy is to move gradually towards SHARE parity in a way which avoids turbulence. The implications of this for Greater Glasgow health board is kept under regular review in discussion between the board and the management executive.

Children

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the number of children (a) on the child protection register, (b) in care in local authority accommodation and (c) in foster placements in respect of each regional and islands authority at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 March 1991]: Information from child protection registers maintained by social work departments is not held centrally. The most recent available information about the accommodation of children in care or under supervision is published in table 4 of statistical bulletin No. CC13/1990 "Children in Care or Under Supervision as at 31 March 1989". This publication is available in the House Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Administrative Tribunals

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Attorney-General if the Council on Tribunals will publish draft model rules of procedure for administrative tribunals in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor and the Lord Advocate yesterday received copies of a special report to Parliament by the Council on Tribunals on draft model rules of procedure for administrative tribunals. It offers much helpful and practical advice to policy-makers and those responsible for drafting tribunal procedural rules which will be of great value in future in preparing procedural rules for new tribunals or amending the rules of existing tribunals. The Government welcome the report and are grateful to the Council on Tribunals for reporting on this matter. The report is available from HMSO (Cm. 1434).

NATIONAL FINANCE

London Weighting

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) why London weighting for civil servants has been frozen since April 1988; and when he proposes to increase it to meet the increased cost of living in London;

(2) why his Department has refused to go to arbitration over the question of London weighting for civil servants;

(3) whether he has any plans to abolish London weighting for civil servants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have no plans to abolish the London weighting paid to civil servants.

The Government's policy is that pay in London, as elsewhere, should be based on what is required to recruit, retain, and motivate within what is affordable and to target pay to get the best value for taxpayers' money. Since 1988, an additional £87 million has been put into London pay, equivalent to more than a 50 per cent. increase in London weighting, through targeted increases. Recruitment and retention rates have improved significantly since 1988. Against this background, there was no justification for any across-the-board increases in London weighting.

London weighting was last increased on 1 July 1988. Successive Governments have reserved the right not to go to arbitration on issues which raise policy considerations. The 1989 and 1990 claims by the Council of Civil Service Unions raised such considerations in respect of the Government's policies on the targeting of pay and the control of public expenditure. I could not therefore agree to a joint approach to the civil service arbitration tribunal.

THE ARTS

Liverpool Playhouse

Mr. Parry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the future of the Liverpool Playhouse theatre at the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members, and from others, on behalf of the Liverpool Playhouse. Although I have no direct involvement in this matter, I am being kept abreast of developments by the playhouse and the Arts Council. I understand that the appointed administrator is continuing his efforts, in consultation with a range of local interests and the Arts Council, to resolve the company's financial difficulties. I very much hope there will be a successful outcome.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rights of the Child

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards the United Kingdom's ratification of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are making good progress. The Whitehall review of the convention has now taken place and we have identified the few areas where we envisage the need to enter reservations upon ratification in respect of the United Kingdom mainland. They are immigration and nationality, juvenile custody, employment, termination of pregnancy and children's hearings in Scotland. We are consulting the dependent territories and United Kingdom islands about their inclusion and will ratify the convention as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Smoking

Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to establish co-ordination between the Department of Health's policies on the discouragement of smoking and support through the common agricultural policy for tobacco growing.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has long been critical of the EC tobacco support regime and has consistently pressed for measures to reduce the level of subsidy.

Ministers at the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have raised the matter with their European colleagues on many occasions and will continue to do so.

The Commission has agreed to bring forward proposals shortly for a revision of the tobacco regime and, although details are not yet available, we are hopeful of progress.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Public Utilities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will institute a study into the advantages and disadvantages of inter-sectoral mergers, takeovers and share stakes in the public utilities.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to instigate such a study. Current legislation provides a sufficient safeguard for the public interest in relation to mergers, including those involving privatised utilities.

President Bush

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what matters were discussed in his meeting in Bermuda with President Bush.

The Prime Minister: We discussed a wide range of subjects, including the aftermath of the Gulf crisis, middle east security issues, the Soviet Union, the Uruguay round, South Africa and arms control.

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how, under the present remuneration system, general practitioners as a whole may be rewarded for new work and responsibilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The doctors and dentists review body takes account of evidence on any changes in general practitioners' work load and responsibilities when making its recommendations each year on the level of GPs' average net remuneration.

Exhibitions

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Pre-School Playgroups Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 20 to 24 May.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Children's Society to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 7 to 10 May.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning organophosphorous toxicity arising from the dipping of sheep; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received four inquiries regarding possible adverse effects from the organophosphorus sheep dips during the past 10 months. Organophosphorus sheep dip, if properly used, are unlikely to cause harm, although a few people may be unusually sensitive. I understand that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is currently reviewing sheep dips.

Anybody who considers that they may have been adversely affected by exposure to sheep dips should report the matter to the veterinary medicines directorate at Weybridge.

Departmental Property

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many properties owned and administered by his Department have been empty for (a) more than six months or (b) more than one year; and what is the regional distribution of these properties.

Mr. Dorrell: The National Health Service has some 4,000 hectares of land which is surplus to requirements and in process of disposal. The distribution between regional health authorities is as follows:

Region	Surplus land area (hectares)
Northern	355
Yorkshire	509
Trent	535
East Anglia	94
North West Thames	86
North East Thames	335
South East Thames	394
South West Thames	287
Wessex	25
Oxford	91
South Western	182
West Midlands	573
Mersey	278
North Western	339

Detailed information about the length of time National Health Service property has been empty is not held centrally.

Adoption

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government have any plans to establish an agency for inter-country adoption.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to establish such an agency. There are 108 local authorities in England which are adoption agencies and a further 37 approved adoption societies. Guidance was issued in September to each of these agencies in relation to the provision of services for inter-country adoption. A copy of CI(90)17 is available in the Library. We expect to issue further guidance shortly.

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many of the new administrative posts created by Leicestershire health authorities in 1989-90 and 1990-91 have been filled; what are the job descriptions for the posts; and what is the salary for each post;

(2) how many new administrative posts were created by Leicestershire health authority in each of the years (i) 1988-89, (ii) 1989-90 and (iii) 1990-91; and how much was spent on advertising those posts.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Townsend, the chairman of Leicestershire health authority, for details.

Ambulance Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each ambulance authority the number of journeys cancelled due to no vehicle being available in each of the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for 1989-90 for each ambulance authority the percentage of emergency calls where response time was within (a) 14 minutes and (b) seven minutes.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for response times are collected centrally only at seven and 14 minutes for metropolitan authorities. These are given in table 1.

Data for response times for non-metropolitan authorities are collected at eight and 20 minutes. These are shown in table 2.

Dentists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists on each family health services authority list withdrew and how many joined between 1 October 1989 and 1 October 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: Between 1 October 1989 and 1 October 1990, 3,666 dentists withdrew from FHSA dental lists in England, and 4,047 dentists were added to those lists. This represents a net increase of 381. The details for each FHSA in England are set out in the table.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority will publish its code of practice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has today published a consultation document containing its proposals for the code of practice. Comments and suggestions have been invited from an extensive range of interested organisations and from treatment and research centres which are to be regulated.

Once the consultation exercise is complete, the authority will prepare a further draft of the code. In accordance with section 26 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, this will then be subject to approval by the Secretary of State before it is laid before Parliament.

Continence Services

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the proposed review of continence services.

Mr. Dorrell: Officials have started work on a review of policy and practice across the range of continence services, including the supply of continence aids. We are already aware of the variety of provision and the aim of the review will be to identify good practice in the organisation and delivery of such services and to make recommendations for action designed to promote that good practice throughout the country. Officials have been asked to deliver their report by the end of June 1991. I will make the report available in the Library and to interested bodies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hunting, New Forest

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, if he will seek a report from the chief constable of Hampshire as to what the costs were of police overtime for presence at hunts in the New Forest on boxing day 1990 and new year's day 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable that the estimated costs for police overtime arising from policing the hunts on boxing day 1990 and new year's day 1991 were £2,771 and £1,373 respectively.

Crime Prevention Week

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much the advertising agency Collett, Dickinson, Pearce and Partners will receive for developing plans for advertising for Crime Prevention Week;

(2) what is the cost of the national advertising campaign for Crime Prevention Week;

(3) what is the cost of the promotion work by Clerk Hooper Consulting for Crime Prevention Week;

(4) what is the cost of television commercials for national Crime Prevention Week.

Mr. John Patten: The cost of the Crime Prevention Week advertising campaign will be £3,600,000, including VAT, of which nearly £1,450,000 is for television commercials. The cost of non-advertising promotional activity for the week will be £900,000, including VAT. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, the Government do not disclose the rate of commission or the fees negotiated with individual agencies.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what resources are to be given to local planning groups for Crime Prevention Week;

(2) what resources are being given to local authorities to develop crime prevention initiatives for Crime Prevention Week;

(3) what extra resources are to be given to local authorities to build on the work of Crime Prevention Week.

Mr. John Patten: The resources made available by the Government consist of a large volume of publicity material, including a campaign planning guide and extensive advertising, which it is expected will provide valuable support for activity organised at local level by the police, local authorities and other bodies and individuals with an interest in crime prevention.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to prevent the publicity surrounding Crime Prevention Week from enhancing the fear of crime.

Mr. John Patten: The need to avoid increasing the fear of crime was taken fully into account in preparing advertising and publicity for Crime Prevention Week. One of the most important messages of the week will be that many crimes can be prevented by members of the public taking sensible precautions against them.

Departmental Property

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many properties, owned and administered by his Department, have stood empty (a) for over six months or (b) for over one year; and what is the regional distribution of these properties.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is assumed that the question relates to housing. The best estimate of the numbers of empty prison service properties, as at 1 March 1991, was 458, as set out in the table by region.

	North	Midland	South East	South West	Total
Vacant for security reasons or redevelopment	29	45	17	3	94
Vacant for re-allocation to designated staff	21	16	12	7	56
Awaiting demolition	63	—	—	—	63
On market for sale	165	36	8	6	215
Awaiting disposal	13	12	1	4	30
TOTALS	291	109	38	20	458

Information on the length of time for which these properties have been vacant is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In addition, the Home Office directorate of telecommunications owns some properties which have been vacant for more than 12 months. Three of these are in the midlands, one in the south-west and one in the south-east.

Women Prisoners

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of hours spent by a woman in seclusion at a women's prison or young offenders' institution over the last 12 months; and what is the average number of hours spent by women in seclusion.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available in the form requested. Inmates may be removed from normal prison location at their own request or as a result of their behaviour. Inevitably the regime available to them is limited, but wherever circumstances allow they are able to associate with others in a similar position. Whatever the reason for their segregation, inmates will receive regular visits from the governor, medical officer and chaplain, and the staff on the unit on which they are held will be available to them as necessary.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have sought asylum in Britain during the past 12 months; how many have been granted, how many refused and how many are pending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A fully reliable estimate of the number of applications for asylum in the United Kingdom in 1990 cannot yet be made, but provisional indications are that it was of the order of 30,000, including associated dependants. This figure does not include applications for upgrading to refugee status by those previously granted exceptional leave.

Comprehensive information on decisions in 1990 on asylum applications is not yet available. Decisions recorded to date are shown in the following table, but these understate because of delays in recording.

Decisions[1] on applications[2] for asylum in the United Kingdom made in 1990

	Numbers
Granted asylum	1,600
Granted exceptional leave	3,700
Refused asylum or exceptional leave	650

[1] Including associated dependants.
[2] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in 1990.

Provisional indications are that about 38,000 asylum applications, including associated dependants, were awaiting a decision in the United Kingdom at 31 December 1990. However, this estimate overstates the position because of under-recording of decisions made earlier.

Fuller and more reliable estimates of applications, decisions and applications outstanding in 1990 will be published as usual in the annual Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom" later this year.

Voluntary Sector Funding

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken following publication of the efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 4 April last year, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), Official Report, column 639, my predecessor announced the publication of the efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector. He said that this would provide the basis for improving arrangements to ensure that the money was used both efficiently and for good purposes. Generally, the report has had a favourable response both within the voluntary sector and elsewhere.

Departments have now considered the scrutiny recommendations as they affect individual grant schemes and have drawn up action plans for taking forward and implementing these recommendations. The aim will be to implement all the agreed changes by September 1993, but some Departments will be able to put new arrangements in place earlier.

I am placing in the Library a statement, "Profiting From Partnership—The Implementation Process", explaining the action which Departments will be taking. This will also be available to voluntary organisations and other interested parties on request from the voluntary services unit in the Home Office.

The majority of the recommendations of the scrutiny report fall to be considered in relation to each grant scheme or programme individually. In general, these are accepted where they are applicable and, where they are not already departmental practice, will be implemented in the light of the principles set out in the statement of 4 April 1990. However, not all the recommendations are applicable to all individual grant schemes and programmes.

There are also a number of recommendations which relate to the role of the voluntary services unit—VSU—of the Home Office. The VSU intends to issue a revised statement of its role later in 1991. The VSU will also be taking the lead in co-ordinating the work to affect the implementation of those recommendations which are cross-departmental.

Preliminary discussions have been held with the voluntary sector about the scrutiny report in general.

Departments will take account of the views of the organisations that they fund and of representative bodies working within their policy areas in carrying out the process of review.

Electoral Roll

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) aged over 17 and under 26 years and eligible to vote in a general election and (b) aged 16 or 17 years in the United Kingdom on the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

No data are collected about the ages of people eligible to vote. There were 628,858 people on the 1990 parliamentary electoral registers in the United Kingdom who were aged 16 or 17 on the qualifying date and who became 18 and eligible to vote during the currency of that register up to 15 February 1991. Information about the 1991 register which came into use on 16 February is still being collected centrally by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. This information will be made available by the end of May.

ENERGY

Oil Exploration, Wiltshire

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of oil exploration in Wiltshire.

Mr. Moynihan: No significant discoveries of oil have been made to date in Wiltshire. Since the reply given to my hon. Friend's similar question on 26 October 1989 at column 519, two further seismic survey programmes and one geochemical soil test have been carried out under petroleum licences covering parts of the county.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list all incidents and occurrences, including radioactive dose exposure to employees, involving the release or potential release of radioactive matter from high-level waste slurry/sludge storage tanks that have been reported to his Department or lodged with the nuclear installations Inspectorate under the established reporting procedures, in each of the last five years;

(2) if he will list the size, number and types of storage tanks at each location in the United Kingdom at which high-level radioactive waste is stored; whether the waste is acid or alkali; what is the rate of hydrogen evolution from such tanks; and what is the method of purging this;

(3) if he will name each establishment in the United Kingdom where liquid and/or slurry/sludge high-level radioactive waste is processed, treated and stored; and what is the volume and total radioactive inventory and radionuclide composition of the high-level wastes stored at each such location.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: High-level liquid waste is produced in the United Kingdom at Sellafield and Dounreay, and is stored on site. Details of quantities and activity may be found in the United Kingdom inventory of radioactive waste, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The high-level waste is acidic. Hydrogen evolution does occur, but levels are extremely low and the tanks are continuously ventilated.

There have been no reportable incidents or occurrences involving high-level liquid waste storage tanks in the past five years.

Home Energy Efficiency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision he is making to ensure grant entitlement under the home energy efficiency scheme for those who cannot complete and sign their application forms for reasons of illiteracy, disability, illness or incapacity.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the Home Energy Efficiency Grants Regulations 1990, the applicant for a grant under the home energy efficiency scheme must be a householder, although the person in receipt of a qualifying benefit may be the householder or the householder's spouse. There is no requirement for the applicant to complete the form him or herself, although the applicant is required to sign.

For the very few cases where the inability to sign an application form causes difficulties, we are examining urgently whether the regulations would permit some form of proxy signature or other alternative. In the event that no satisfactory solution can be found, amending regulations will be introduced at an early opportunity.

National Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the implications for the maximising of revenue from privatisations of Nomura Securities' acquisition of a 9 per cent. stake in National Power other than by purchase from the Department of Energy.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The market for equity in National Power and PowerGen was thoroughly tested through competitive book-building in the period before impact day. In addition, some of the benefit of the market rise during the offer period was obtained for the taxpayer through an international tender. I am satisfied that all appropriate steps to maximise proceeds were taken, having regard to other policy objectives. It is for investors to decide whether and if so how they wish to participate in the second market.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Environmental Issues

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider to seek to establish a Northern Ireland environmental protection agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to establish an independent environmental protection agency for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Gentlemen will be aware that the Environment Committee of this House, in its recent report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, recommended the establishment of such a body. I am at present examining the recommendations in this report. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to recommendation 21 in the first report of the Environment Committee of Session 1990-91 entitled "Environmental Issues in Northern Ireland"; and when the Department of the Environment will carry out a review of the effects of current policies on residential development in the countryside and institute a policy which will enable rural planning policy to be relaxed, and crossroads development to take place.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Environment Committee of this House, in its recent report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, recommended a review of planning policies on residential development in the countryside. I am at present examining the recommendations in this report. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to ensure that long-term environmental considerations are fully taken into account when financial inducements are given to incoming investors to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Environment Committee of this House, in its recent report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, recommended that the Government take steps to prevent the contamination of land by industry. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce a system of grant-aid for the clean-up of contaminated sites.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will establish a register of contaminated land in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Gentlemen will be aware that the Environment Committee of this House, in its recent report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, expressed concern about contaminated land. I am at present examining the recommendations in this report. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to recommendation No. 15 in the first report of the Environment Committee of Session 1990-91 entitled "Environmental Issues in Northern Ireland"; and what action the Government will adopt to reduce the incidents of eutrophication of inland waters.

Mr. Needham: The Government are at present examining this recommendation, as part of their consideration of the Environment Committee's report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to the conclusion No. 25 in the first report of the Environment Committee of Session 1990-91 entitled "Environmental Issues in Northern Ireland"; and whether the Government will adopt measures such as national parks and management plans for areas such as the Mournes in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Needham: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the Environment Committee of this House, in its recent report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland, recommended measures such as national parks and management plans. I am at present examining the recommendations in this report. The Government's response to the report will take the form of a Command Paper and I would not wish to pre-empt that response at this stage.

Former Courtaulds Site

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who is responsible for cleaning up the former Courtaulds site near Carrickfergus.

Mr. Needham: Responsibility for cleaning up this site lies with the new owners.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken to prevent pollution from solvents and drums of chemicals left at the former Courtaulds site near Carrickfergus.

Mr. Needham: Provided that the Carrickfergus borough council is satisfied that no public health nuisance exists, and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is satisfied that no water pollution is occurring, action on the former Courtaulds site would be the responsibility of a new owner who wished to develop the site.

The Department has established that certain inorganic wastes are present on the site and will continue to monitor the situation.

Unemployment

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give an estimate of the level of unemployment in each of the 17 Northern Ireland constituencies in both 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Needham: The information requested for parliamentary constituencies is not available prior to October 1984. Data from October 1984 onwards can be obtained from the House of Commons Library and information post-June 1986 is available from the NOMIS database which can also be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Expenditure, Leicestershire

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent on education in Leicestershire in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available, adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Fallon: Leicestershire's returns show that it spent some £131 million cash on education in 1979-80, and some £289 million cash in 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available. At 1988-89 prices this represents some £247 million in 1979-80 and £289 million in 1988-89, an increase of 17 per cent.

National Curriculum

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to lay the orders on the national curriculum for history and geography; and in what respect they will differ from the draft.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I expect to lay these orders shortly. I cannot anticipate them.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 8 March, columns 299-300, he will give an estimate of the cost, in the case of each named city technology college, of visits and other attention by Her Majesty's inspectorate; and whether any part of this cost has been charged to the city technology college.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The approximate direct cost of the visits made by Her Majesty's inspectorate to the city technology colleges is as follows:

Kingshurst: £3,750
Djanogly and Macmillan: £3,750 each
Bradford, Emmanuel, Harris and Leigh: £1,325 each

Under section 77(2) of the 1944 Education Act I have a duty to cause inspections to be made of all educational establishments at such intervals as appear to me to be appropriate. City technology colleges are independent schools and HMI inspects such schools under section 70 of the Act. All visits by HMI to maintained and independent schools are made at no cost to the institution. As a consequence, no part of the cost of visits has been charged to the city technology colleges.

Belize

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what contribution is being made by British scientific expertise to the protection of the rain forest and coral reef in Belize.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Neither this Department nor the Natural Environment Research Council is currently funding or undertaking any work in Belize.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the Number of permanent staff employed by the AFRC in 1984 and in 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There were 5,660 permanent staff in post at AFRC-funded institutes and AFRC central office on 1 April 1984.

The figure for 1 April 1991 is estimated at 3,225, including 450 staff who are employed by AFRC but seconded to Horticulture Research International.

Environmental Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the new Open university initiative on environmental education; and when he next expects to visit the Open university to discuss the development of environmental education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I welcome the steps which the Open university has taken to integrate its environmental courses and develop an interdisciplinary environmental education programme. The Open university's contribution to this area was recognised in the environment White Paper, and has been supported by grants from bodies including the Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council. I understand that the University's proposals for environmental education were further discussed during the visit by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment in October last year.

I am expecting to visit the university in July, when I hope to see a range of its activities at first hand.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent on youth training in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest available year.

Mr. Jackson: Expenditure on youth training in 1979-80 was £123·4 million[1]. The estimated expenditure on youth training (YT) in 1990-91 is expected to be £833 million[2].

[1] Youth opportunities programme (YOP).
[2] As published in the departmental report (Cm. 1501-1519).

Careers Service

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will publish the findings from the review of the careers service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I am currently studying a report by my officials on the review of career guidance. I intend to consult especially training and enterprise councils and local education authorities about the future of the careers service.

Ports

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what change there has been in (a) operating costs and (b) profits to port employers since the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Port employers' operating costs will reflect the fact that since 1988, when the estimated total wage bill of registered dock workers was £175 million, some three quarters of them have been made redundant. A fuller picture of the benefits of abolition will emerge during the next few weeks, as port authorities publish their financial results for 1990.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reduction there has been in dock dues to port customers since the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Rates charged by ports to their main customers are a commercial matter between those parties.

TRANSPORT

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many letters his Department has received on the orange badge scheme for each of the last six months;

(2) how many staff in his Department spend most of their time dealing with inquiries relating to the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Chope: The following number of letters were received in the last six months:

	Number
September	122
October	136
November	116
December	68
January	121
February	106

and it is estimated that there are more than 1 million orange badge holders.

Three members of the Department's staff are primarily employed in answering inquiries from them and others.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to introduce regulations revising the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Chope: I wish to see agreements among user groups before making any decision on the orange badge scheme.

I will then bring forward the necessary amending regulations.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to discourage local authorities from establishing local schemes which undermine the national nature of the orange badge scheme.

Mr. Chope: I hope that the introduction of a new passport-style badge will be a significant aid to enforcement which will discourage local authorities from setting up their own schemes.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the current repairs and maintenance work on the Severn bridge to be completed; and when the bridge will become fully operational.

Mr. Chope: The resurfacing contract is due for completion in the late summer, when the bridge will be fully operational in its final configuration.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the original estimated cost of the current repairs and maintenance work on the Severn bridge; and what is the latest estimated cost.

Mr. Chope: The current estimated cost of the repair and strengthening work is £80 million. The estimates have been revised many times over the years as changes to the scope of work have become necessary and an original estimated cost on a comparable basis with the current estimate is not available.

Motorway Safety

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent the chevron marking of motorways for safety purposes is being considered for the road network as a whole; and whether road safety research carried out by other European countries is made available across the EC.

Mr. Chope: We are currently experimenting with chevron markings on motorways. That trial is due to end in the summer and we shall then consider the research report. The trial is based on French work, the results of which was made available to us prior to our own trials. Further work was considered necessary to see if the chevrons would be successful in different conditions.

There is no formal arrangement for the transfer of road safety research results within the EC on such matters, but information is readily shared in practice.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on the use of motorway warning lights in fog.

Mr. Chope: The matrix signs that are installed on most of the motorway network can indicate temporary speed restrictions and lane closures. They are activated by the police. The advice given to all police forces by the Association of Chief Police Officers is that they should be used only for hazards which are not readily apparent to drivers, and not for generally adverse weather conditions. I am arranging to discuss this policy with the association.

Fog detectors linked automatically to warning signs that display the legend "fog" are under evaluation on the M25. The lessons to be learned from this trial will be applied to other parts of the motorway network.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to vary speed limits on motorways in adverse weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Provision is being made in the Road Traffic Bill for the introduction of mandatory variable speed limits. Once the necessary signal technology has been developed and tested this will offer the potential for signing mandatory lower speed limits on motorways in adverse weather conditions as well as in other circumstances.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to modernise or improve the warning light systems on Britain's motorways.

Mr. Chope: A new signalling system combining an improved matrix signal with a supporting variable message sign is being installed on the south-west quadrant of the M25 during the next 12 months. This advanced signalling system will inform drivers of the nature of problems before they are encountered. It is planned that these signs will become automatically operated to give the earliest possible warning of problems or delays.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the motorway warning light system which operates in Holland; and how this compares with the British system.

Mr. Chope: Officials of the Department have visited the Netherlands and had discussions about signalling practices. The Dutch motorway warning light system uses a matrix signal similar to that used in England. The system is concentrated on motorways in urban areas and is automatically operated. In England more than 97 per cent. of the motorway network is fitted with matrix warning systems, 100 km are automatically operated, the rest are operated by the police.

Departmental Property

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) on 26 July 1990, if his Department has updated figures on the number of properties owned and administered by his Department (a) empty for more than six months or (b) empty for more than one year; and what is the regional distribution of these properties.

Mr. Chope: At 30 September 1990 the Department owned 2,339 residential properties acquired in advance of requirements for the trunk road programme. The Department's policy is not to leave properties empty if they are to be retained for six months or more and a tenant can be found. The table sets out the information that is available in the same form as the earlier reply.

Poynton Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what routes he is considering for the A523 Poynton bypass; and when he expects to make a decision.

Mr. Chope: Options based on the orange and green routes passing to the west of Poynton and combining with the eastern section of the proposed A6(M) to M56 (Manchester airport) link are being considered.

I hope to announce a preferred route within the next few weeks.

Roads, Leicestershire

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on new roads in north-west Leicestershire since 1979.

Mr. Chope: Since 1979 the Department of Transport and Leicestershire county council have to date spent £85·25 million on the construction of new trunk and principal roads in north-west Leicestershire. The details are as follows:

Toll Road, Cheshire

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the alternative routes for the proposed toll road parallel to the M6 through Cheshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Four groups responded to our invitation for outline proposals for new privately funded road capacity between Birmingham and Manchester. We are still discussing with the respondents aspects of their proposals, which remain commercially confidential.

Gulf Marine Environment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the work of his marine pollution control unit in relation to the Gulf.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine pollution control unit (MPCU) has contributed to the response to the Gulf oil spill in a variety of ways in conjunction with the Department of the Environment (DOE) which has led on behalf of the Government.

In response to a Saudi Arabian request on 27 January the MPCU facilitated the movement of 90 tonnes of oil containment booms and skimmers from the commercial oil spill service centre at Southampton to Dhahran in Ministry of Defence chartered freight aircraft on 28, 29 and 30 January.

On 28 January the Saudi Arabian Government requested the provision by the United Kingdom of two counter-pollution experts to assist their meteorology and environmental protection administration in responding to the spill. These were immediately provided by the MPCU —one MPCU scientist and another contracted by the MPCU from the DTI Warren Spring laboratory. After the necessary inoculations and training in personal anti-chemical warfare protection the experts arrived in Dhahran on 31 January. They assisted in the creation of a counter-pollution command and control organisation, checked and advised on the boom protection of seawater intakes to desalination plants and important economic sites, and advised on the identification and protection of important coastal ecological sites including plans to be implemented as equipment was made available. On-site reports relayed by these experts direct to the MPCU and thence to the DOE have provided a source of detailed information on the slick and the response to it which has been of great value to the assessment by the Government of the overall situation.

On completion of the initial phase, these scientists were replaced on 15 February by the MPCU chief scientist to provide advice on the selection of disposal sites for recovered oil, spill movement prediction, and the short and long-term recovery of contaminated shores. In response to a request for assistance by the Bahraini Government he also visited Bahrain, to advise on ways in which Her Majesty's Government could help in the event that the oil might reach the Bahraini coast. This led to the gift by Her Majesty's Government of specialist oil recovery equipment —recommended by the MPCU—to the Government of Bahrain. On completion of these tasks and after agreement with the Saudi Arabian authorities, he returned to the United Kingdom on 1 March.

Since 29 January the MPCU has also acted as the co-ordination centre for commercial offers of counter-pollution personnel and equipment from British companies to assist with the oil spill. These have been passed on, as appropriate, to Gulf states via the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and to the International Maritime Organisation (IMO), which has been asked by the Saudi Arabian Government to act as a clearing house for all international offers of this kind.

The MPCU has provided technical advice to DOE throughout the incident and more recently, the unit has also advised IMO on various clean-up strategies which have been proposed by the Saudi Arabian control centre and which might be supported by the IMO fund to which Her Majesty's Government have contributed £1 million.

Coach Bans, Pimlico

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress of the implementation of the coach ban in parts of Pimlico, as agreed by his Department in accordance with the submission of Westminster city council; when the ban will be introduced; how many signs are needed; what these will cost; and who will pay for them.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 March 1991]: The implementation of the area coach ban and the associated costs are matters for Westminster city council. The Department's approval for a coach ban in the Victoria/Belgravia/Bayswater/Sussex Gardens/Bryanston areas which was required under the Local Government Act 1985 because of the potential effect on traffic flow in the strategic road network, was given on 16 October 1990.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

18. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his alternative proposals for agriculture reform to those proposed by the European Commission.

Mr. Gummer: I have set out on a number of occasions the objectives we are pursuing in negotiations on the reform of the CAP.

24. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on any official proposals from the European Commission and member Governments to reform the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) earlier today.

25. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the budget estimate for EC spending on agriculture in 1991, expressed in pounds sterling; and if he will make a statement outlining the legal and administrative procedures for preventing overruns in this area of spending.

Mr. Gummer: The Community agriculture budget for 1991 totals £24,240 million excluding the monetary reserve. All Community expenditure is subject to controls under Council decision 88/377 concerning budgetary discipline and any increase in budget provisions requires the approval of the Council and the European Parliament. Furthermore, there are specific procedures in the budget discipline decision to ensure that the agricultural guideline for market support of £22,656 million in 1991 is respected.

Imported Wild Birds

19. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's actions to reduce the mortality of imported wild birds.

Mr. Maclean: The Ministry's second report on mortalities in imported captive birds, relating to imports in 1989, was published in February. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I regard the level of mortality as unacceptably high and the Department is taking what action it can to reduce losses. During the past year veterinary officials have visited major exporting countries and more visits are to take place. We insist that the authorities responsible for exports must comply with our import requirements and observe welfare standards of the International Air Transport Association. Consideration is being given to revised pre-export isolation and certification requirements, and we will prohibit imports of birds from any country that fails to co-operate.

Following a review of quarantine standards the number of birds in each quarantine premises will be specified according to physiological and behavioural needs. These measures are expected to result in reduced consignment sizes, and from 1 April the maximum size of any consignment of non-psittacines will be reduced from 6,000 to 4,000. Applicants for import licences are also now required to provide more detailed information and we are considering tightening further the application of our disease control arrangements.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is also considering what action can be taken within his responsibilities.

Many of the problems arising from this trade would be significantly reduced if the public did not purchase captive birds. Some species should not be taken from the wild for this trade, and nobody should contemplate buying or keeping birds unless proper care and facilities are available.

Fishing Industry

20. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the eight-day tie-up regulations affecting the fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: The regulations were thoroughly debated on 5 March, and I have nothing to add.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to ensure the accurate reporting of fish catches in area VIIA in the Irish sea.

Mr. Curry: Accurate reporting of fish catches, whether in area VIIA or elsewhere is primarily a matter for individual fishermen. The Government's role is to check the accuracy of such reports by means of spot checks and by comparing them with other data, including data from surface and aerial surveillance. When discrepancies are suspected they are investigated with a view to legal proceedings. In 1990 there were 92 prosecutions on United Kingdom vessels for offences against the control regulation (Council regulation 2241/87) which governs the recording of fishing activity and catches.

Wheat

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current intervention stocks of wheat held in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: A table setting out intervention stock levels in the EC and the United Kingdom is deposited monthly in the House of Commons Library. Latest figures were tabled on 12 March.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average ex-farm price of wheat received by (a) British farmers, (b) French farmers, (c) German farmers and (d) the EEC generally in 1979, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 in pounds sterling.

Mr. Curry: The information requested by my hon. Friend is not yet published for 1990. The information for the other years is set out in the table. Producer prices for the European Community as a whole are not available.

Sugar Beet Quotas

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the National Farmers Union in respect of sugar beet quotas.

Mr. Curry: None.

Food Prices

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the comparable increase in the price of food to consumers as measured against the retail prices index since 1979.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir M. Shaw) earlier today.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what change in retail food prices there has been for each of the last three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Food prices are leading the way to lower inflation. The rate of food price inflation fell from 6·9 per cent. in November to 6·6 per cent. in December and 5·9 per cent. in January.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he has introduced to the set-aside scheme since its initial introduction.

Mr. Curry: Several changes have been introduced for the third year of the set-aside scheme in particular to improve its impact upon the environment:

The number of cuts required of the plant cover on fallow set-aside land has been increased from one to two;

The list of environmental features which farmers have to maintain and protect on set-aside land has been extended;

A limited grazed fallow option has been included;

The rates of aid for permanent and rotational fallow have been increased, partly to offset the increased costs arising from the new management rules;

Differential rates of aid have been introduced for farmers who fallow more than 100 hectares of land and more than 75 per cent. of their eligible area, in order to reflect better the fixed cost savings.

Other changes have also been made to the scheme in the light of experience of its first two years of operation.

Knacker Industry

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the knacker industry; and what representations he has received from United Kingdom knackermen and knackerwomen.

Mr. Maclean: I have received a number of representations from the knacker industry, which remains an important part of our animal waste disposal system. That is why we fought so hard and succeeded in securing arrangements under new Community rules on animal waste disposal which will ensure that the industry will be able to continue in its present form at least until 1995 and even after that if agreement can be reached.

Farm Rents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average farm rent in pounds per acre in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) England for each year since 1979.

Mr. Curry: The table gives average farm rents in metric terms for (a) Great Britain and (b) England. Information cannot be provided on a United Kingdom basis because Northern Ireland's land tenure system is not generally comparable with that of Great Britain.

Average farm rents (£ per hectare)

Bread

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been (a) the price of bread and (b) the price of wheat in each of the last three years; and what have been the annual increases in real, actual and percentage terms.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is set out in the table:

Farming Subsidies

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about subsidies available to pig farmers and horticultural farmers in the Netherlands which are available through (a) the European Community and (b) the Dutch Government; whether those in (a) are available in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: European Community price support arrangements for pigmeat and for horticultural products apply in both the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

The Government do not keep comprehensive details of the national subsidies and other state aids available to farmers in the Netherlands and other member states, since to do so would not be a cost effective use of resources. All state aids are, however, subject to the provisions of articles 92 to 94 of the treaty of Rome, and member states are required to obtain the Commission's approval in advance for new state aids and modifications to existing aids and to send an inventory of all state aids to the Commission annually. The Government monitor, through their embassies in the Netherlands and elsewhere, the introduction of new state aids and modifications to existing aids, and draw any that seem to be of doubtful legality to the attention of the Commission.

Green Pound

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the different green pound rates operative in various agricultural commodities and each individual rate for each type of cereals and other crops listed under cropping in the annual review of agriculture White Paper for (a) Great Britain, (b) Northern Ireland and (c) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is set out in the table:

Commodity	Green rate [1]United Kingdom	[2]Republic of Ireland

Animal Medicines

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the levels of fees for licensing animal medicines in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the other countries of the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is set out in the table. This is based on information circulated by the EC Commission in November 1990 to provide an approximate estimate of the fees payable in each member state. The pound sterling rates have been converted from ECUs at the rate prevailing on 30 November 1990.

Fees payable for authorisation of veterinary medicinal products in EC member states: 1990-91

Country	Product with new active ingredient (£)	Product with established active ingredient (£)
Belgium	1,079	1,079
Denmark	1,915	1,915
Germany	8,202	2,563
Greece	204	204
Spain	8	8
Ireland	1,468	296
Italy	525	525
Luxembourg	49	49
Netherlands	834	303
Portugal	310	310
United Kingdom	12,000	3,000

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make it his policy to limit the increase in fees for licensing animal medicines to the level of inflation.

Mr. Maclean: No. Government policy remains that the full cost of licensing should be recovered from the industry through the fees it pays for licences and other services. Costs will continue to be reviewed annually and, where necessary, any increases will be reflected in the fees charged. But with improvements in efficiency at the Veterinary Medicines Directorate resulting from its establishment as a "next steps" agency, I would expect any increases that may arise to be kept below the level of inflation as is the case this year. Proposals currently before the House for 1991-92 are for an increase of 5 per cent. in fees for product licences and animal test certificates, and an average of 8 per cent. for other fees and inspections. Both are well below the current rate of inflation.

Equine Population

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he estimates to be the equine population (a) currently and (b) five, 10, 15 and 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No official figures are available for the total equine population, but the department periodically collects information on horses kept on agricultural holdings in England and Wales. Figures for the years of collection giving the nearest match to the years requested, are shown in the following table:

Horses kept on agricultural holdings in England and Wales

	1970	1975	1979	1983	1990
(i) Horses for agricultural and horticultural purposes	[1]12,000	4,100	4,400	5,400	5,200
(ii) All other horses and ponies	114,000	144,000	132,000	144,000	138,000
Totals	126,000	148,100	136,400	149,400	143,200

[1] Collected in 1970 as: Horses (including mares kept for breeding) used for work in agriculture or market gardening.
Note: All figures include estimates for minor holdings.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to recommend to farmers non-organophosphorous sheep dips; how many complaints his Department has received about damages to humans using the present dips; and when he expects to approve further alternative preparations.

Mr. Maclean: I am not taking any steps at this stage to recommend that farmers use one type of sheep dip rather than another. All sheep dip products are currently subject to a review to ensure the most up-to-date safety standards apply. Any products which fail to meet these standards will have to be withdrawn from the market. The results of the review will be announced later this year.

Of the 55 reports of suspected adverse reactions I reported in my reply to my hon. Friend on 11 March at column 399, 41 relate to dips which are presently licensed. That is nine reports fewer than previously indicated. I regret that the expiry of two product licences, for which the nine reports were received, had been overlooked.

I will be happy to approve any alternative preparations which meet the Medicines Act criteria of safety, quality and efficacy.

Consumer Representatives

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with consumer representatives.

Mr. Maclean: Representatives of the consumer organisations were present on the 20 February 1991, at the fourth periodic meeting between my right hon. Friend the Minister and the office holders of consumer organisations. The next meeting is planned for 25 June 1991.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of farms, their locations, the number of cows and which companies are licensed for the testing of bovine somatotropin in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Cyanamid, Lilly Industries and Monsanto are currently authorised to conduct field trials using BST products. Trials involving 70 cows are currently taking place on three farms in the United Kingdom. As the hon. Member is already aware, section 118 of the Medicines Act precludes me from disclosing further details.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Veterinary Products Committee is to consider the possible adverse effects of bovine somatotropin on the human stomach; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The VPC considered this aspect in relation to two BST products before advising me last year that their use would pose no risk to human safety. I assume that the hon. Member is referring to a recent article on this subject in the British Medical Journal. I am asking the VPC to consider this paper in case it contains new data which they will wish to assess.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he now intends to allow the introduction of bovine somatotropin; whether the Veterinary Products Committee has considered the matter further; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The VPC has advised me that applications from Lilly Industries and Monsanto to license BST products should be refused for reasons of animal safety. Both companies have said they will be taking up their right to appeal to the Medicines Commission and to generate additional data for consideration there. I certainly do not intend to license any BST product while these expert committees continue to advise me not to.

Fish Products

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to amend the ingredients regulations concerning fish products.

Mr. Maclean: I have just issued for public consultation proposals for new controls on fish products. The main provisions of the proposals:

(a) require all fish products as defined to be labelled with a declaration of the average fish content;
(b) require a declaration of the presence of minced fish if present in amounts greater than 10 per cent. of the total fish content; and
(c) define the term 'fillet' and permit its use in labelling and advertising to indicate its proportion in the final product.

Once enacted, the proposal will also revoke the Food Standards (Fish Cakes) Order 1950.

Cattle

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the reasons for the imposition of the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibitions) (Lead in Cattle) (England) Order 1991 which was made on 6 March, giving the origins of the contamination and the number of cattle involved; and whether he expects an increase in the number of farms affected.

Mr. Gummer: These restrictions were introduced by an order made under part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to protect consumers by preventing the marketing of contaminated food following an outbreak of lead poisoning among a group of 80 dairy cattle on a farm in Devon. The source of contamination has been traced to an old car battery which had been inadvertently incorporated into a silage clamp. No other farms are affected.

Pollution Control

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that in the case of pollution control projects, grant aid approval will not be refused to farmers who have set about urgent remedial works, eligible for grant, in response to requests from the National Rivers Authority or any other regulatory authority.

Mr. Curry: It has always been our policy to pay grant on claims which comply with the terms of the relevant grant scheme.

Farm Conservation Grants

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many grant applications under the farm aid conservation grant scheme have been refused in the last two years; and for what reasons applications were refused in each case.

Mr. Curry: In England, since the farm and conservation grant scheme was introduced in February 1989, a total of 653 claims have been rejected or withdrawn and 6,626 claims authorised for payment up to the end of February 1991. Claims will have been rejected for a breach of either the statutory requirements or the administrative rules of the scheme. Reasons for rejections in individual cases could be given only at disproportionate cost as this information is not held centrally.

DEFENCE

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a licence has been issued to the Bicester with Whaddon Chase foxhounds to hunt on Ministry of Defence land at Arncott near Bicester in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a licence issued to a hunt to hunt on Ministry of Defence land has ever been revoked or if action has been taken for infringement of licensing conditions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No licence to hunt on Ministry of Defence land has been revoked for breach of the licence conditions. There have been two occasions in the last five years when hunts have been warned about the conduct of themselves or their followers.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the licence fee for hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land becomes payable in 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1991]: There is no specific date in the year for payment of licence fees for hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land. Licences with hunts commence on different dates in the year and payment is required at the start of the licence period and before the hunt enters MOD land.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hunts that had a licence to hunt on Ministry of Defence land have not fully paid the licence fee for 1990 by the end of the year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1991]: There are no outstanding licence fees in respect of 1990 for hunts to hunt on Ministry of Defence land.

Missiles

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Kingswood of 11 March, Official Report, column 412, on the "Family of Weapons Memorandum of Understanding", if he will identify the factors which have given rise to the need to reconsider the status of the MOU with the United States Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: The principal factors relate to changes in the international situation since the MOU was signed in 1980, and to progress made in developing the two weapon systems involved.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to his answer to the hon. Member for Kingswood of 11 March, Official Report, column 412, when the review of BAe's ASRAAM proposal will be complete.

Mr. Alan Clark: Any proposal made by BAe in response to the invitation to tender for solutions to SR(A)1234 will be evaluated along with other proposals received. It is too early to say when these evaluations will be complete.

Christmas Islands

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel who were present at Christmas island during nuclear tests are (a) still living and (b) deceased.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Data on mortality amongst nuclear test participants up to 1 January 1989 is still being verified by the National Radiological Protection Board. Its report on this study will not be available for some time.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what documents relating to British nuclear tests have been released under sections 3(4) and 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958; what documents have been withheld; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Listings of documents related to the British nuclear weapons tests and experiments, whether released or withheld on grounds of national security under the Public Records Act 1958, could not be compiled and published without disproportionate cost.

Gulf War (Casualties)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has informed Gulf support groups that casualty visiting officers will make special arrangements, including payment of allowances and travel costs, for nominated next of kin to visit hospitalised casualties from the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Next of kin of hospitalised personnel were informed by service authorities of the special arrangements for visiting their relatives, including eligibility for concessionary travel and subsistence allowances. It was not necessary to inform Gulf support groups separately of the arrangements, although advice was provided on request.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the nominated next of kin of the very seriously ill, the seriously ill and other hospitalised casualties following the Gulf war have been granted allowances for full board and lodgings and travel costs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the forces returning from the Gulf required or are likely to require hospitalisation; and how many of these have been classified as very seriously ill or seriously ill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date a total of 811 service personnel requiring hospitalisation have returned from the Gulf during operation Granby. Information on the numbers of very seriously ill or seriously ill cases is collected on a daily basis, not as a running total. There were 10 seriously ill and no very seriously ill cases in United Kingdom military hospitals yesterday.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's special armed forces suffered any casualties as a result of participation in operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Four members of the special forces were killed in action.

Gulf Trust

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he has given any advice to service benevolent funds regarding the distribution of money raised by the Gulf Trust; if the service benevolent funds have given him any information regarding money so far allocated; and on what criteria allocations are being made;

(2) how much money has so far been donated to the Gulf Trust; how much has been allocated to the benevolent fund for each service; and on what criteria the allocation was made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total value of donations to the Gulf Trust currently stands at £1·2 million. Allocations from the trust to the service benevolent funds will be made in accordance with needs. No allocations have yet been made. The service benevolent funds will distribute moneys to those in need in accordance with their established practices and within the ambit of their trust deeds.

The Gulf (Camels)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of camels (a) killed by allied bombing raids or ground attacks in Iraq and Kuwait and (b) that have died of asphyxiation from smoke from the burning oil wells in Kuwait.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

The Gulf (Army Personnel)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if British Army personnel serving in the open desert in the Gulf are being charged for their food and accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All Army personnel serving in the desert are exempt from food and accommodation charges.

Fissile Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken by or on behalf of, his Department concerning the long-term verifiable storage or destruction of fissile materials withdrawn from redundant nuclear warheads.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

The Gulf (Smoke)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on the work of the Meteorological Office research aircraft in studying the composition and behaviour of smoke plumes in the Gulf.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The C-130 aircraft of the meteorological research flight is owned and crewed by the RAF. It has been fitted out with a wide range of sophisticated scientific instruments which are operated by Meteorological Office scientists who direct the scientific missions.

The aircraft will conduct a number of flights over the Gulf states before returning to the United Kingdom where the data gathered will be analysed. Measurements will be made of the optical and chemical properities of the oil smoke plume at a number of downwind distances at varying heights. The results will greatly assist the evaluation of the smoke movements and its impact.

Housing Sales

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy regarding the sale of ex-Ministry of Defence housing; and whether any changes have occurred to this policy in the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1991]: Surplus service married quarters which are capable of individual sale are normally offered for sale to serving service personnel at a 30 per cent. discount. Surplus civilian dwellings which are capable of individual sale are normally offered for sale to the civilian occupant at a discount of up to 60 per cent; the difference in discount follows from the service personnel's discount being taxable whereas the discount available to a civilian is not. As an exceptional measure, civilian tenants of surplus service married quarters may be allowed to purchase at a discount of 30 per cent. Surplus housing which is not offered for sale through either of the two discount schemes is normally sold on the open market to the highest bidder. Exceptionally, private treaty sales—for example to a housing association—may be agreed provided that an open market sale is not likely to achieve a higher price; in such cases the price is determined by the district valuer. Apart from the introduction of the civilian discount scheme in 1980 and the service scheme in 1983, there have been no other changes to our disposal policy in the last 10 years.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of his Ministers has been given responsibility for energy use by his Department; and what is his brief regarding energy efficiency.

Mr. Needham: I am responsible to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State both for energy matters, including energy efficiency, and for the environment.

My specific brief on energy efficiency is to promote the continuous implementation of effective energy efficiency measures throughout the Northern Ireland economy. To that end I published an important consultative paper on energy efficiency last December. It promotes energy efficiency in the context of environmental conservation; calls for committed action now by all interested parties; and sets out—by way of example—an extensive range of initiatives being taken by Government including increased financial support for both low-income families and the industrial and commercial sectors. A copy of the consultative paper has been placed in the Library. Responses to the consultative paper are now being analysed and will be reflected in an energy strategy paper to be published later this year.

In the public sector Northern Ireland has had its own inter departmental committee on energy efficiency since 1984. It promotes and co-ordinates public sector initiatives, reports annually to my right hon. Friend and sets targets for continuous improvement. In addition, I represent Northern Ireland on the United Kingdom-wide ministerial group on energy efficiency chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

On 6 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland issued a personal message to all public sector employees in Northern Ireland exhorting them to practise energy efficiency not only at work but at home, in their leisure, social and recreational pursuits. My right hon. Friend wishes to be kept informed of progress.

Job Clubs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will establish a job club in Carrickfergus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. There are job clubs in nearby Larne, Newtownabbey and Belfast. Unemployed people who have to travel to make use of job clubs have their fares reimbursed and so are not out of pocket.

Housing

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of persons on the waiting list of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for accommodation in Belfast districts 2 and 7 and each housing area in Castlereagh in both 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested is not available before 1981. However, at the end of February 1981 and February 1991 the number of persons on the waiting list was as follows:

District	February 1981	February 1991
Belfast 2	1,463	1,036
Belfast 7	1,308	1,184
Castlereagh 1	570	289
Castlereagh 2	1,178	518

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management of Schools

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the budget allocation per unit for local management of schools in (a) Wigston, (b) South Wigston and (c) Oadby; what is the average budget allocation per unit for schools in the city of Leicester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not available for Leicestershire as the authority did not operate a scheme for the local management of its schools in the 1990-91 financial year. We do not yet have a copy of the authority's budget statement for 1991-92; it is under a duty to publish that statement by 31 March.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the proportion of children at schools in Oadby, Wigston and South Wigston that come from out of the catchment area; and what consideration he has given to the implications of this on LMS funding to these schools.

Mr. Fallon: The Department has no information on the sources of pupils attending schools in these districts. Under local management of schools, pupils of the same age are funded on the same basis irrespective of their source. If they come from a neighbouring authority, that authority will pay a recoupment charge to the providing authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As part of its review of forward commitments, the Science and Engineering Research Council announced on 7 February that it could not continue to support both the Institut Laue-Langevin and the ISIS (RAL) neutron facility at the current levels. To help it take the matter further the council has established a review panel to assess the United Kingdom's requirements for neutrons over the coming years and the most effective way of providing them.

Education Resources

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to ensure that more resources are delegated to schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply, 21 February 1991, Official Report, c. 235-39]: The national average of responses retained by LEAs on central administration in 1990-91 as a percentage of the potential schools budget should read 4·06 per cent., rather than 5·26 per cent. as quoted in the table at column 238. The individual LEA figures quoted in the table remain correct.

In the period between 1979-80 and 1989-90 the level of this Government's support for voluntary bodies has risen by 114 per cent. in real terms.

I am placing in the Library of the House a list of voluntary bodies funded by Government in 1989-90, other than those funded under the youth training scheme and employment training, housing programmes and the urban programme or via non-departmental public bodies.

Security Commissioner (Report)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Prime Minister when the Commissioner appointed under the Security Service Act 1989 will present his first annual report; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's first annual report, for 1990, has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 4(6) of the Security Service Act 1989. The confidential appendix to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 4(7) of the 1989 Act. I am grateful to the commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants and note that he is satisfied that the Secretaries of State have properly exercised their powers under the Act.

Troops (Homecoming)

Mr. Mates: To ask the Prime Minister how the Government intend (a) to mark the safe homecoming of British troops who contributed to the liberation of Kuwait, (b) to pay tribute to those who lost their lives in that cause and (c) to honour those who gave gallant and meritorious service.

The Prime Minister: A service of remembrance and thanksgiving will be held in Glasgow cathedral in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen on Saturday 4 May.

The Lord Mayor and the Corporation of London will host a reception at Guildhall on Friday 21 June for members of British forces. It will be preceded by a march through the City at which Her Majesty the Queen will take the salute.

Her Majesty the Queen has approved the award of a Gulf medal for those who served in the region. She has also agreed that there should be a Gulf honours list, to be published at the end of June, for those who displayed gallantry and gave meritorious service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Carers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to ensure that all full-time carers are granted the right to regular breaks, and that those carers wishing to take up such breaks in the company of their clients are given additional resources.

Mr. Scott: The main social security benefit available to carers is invalid care allowance (ICA). ICA is payable to people who give up the opportunity for full-time work to provide regular and substantial care for a severely disabled person receiving attendance allowance. ICA can remain in payment for up to four weeks in any period of 26 weeks while the carer or the person cared for is on holiday, or the caring role is temporarily suspended for some other reason. Breaks in caring can total as much as 12 weeks in a 26-week period, if the breaks are due to the carer or the disabled person undergoing medical or other treatment as an in-patient in a hospital or similar institution.

Social Security Spending

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount spent on social security in the United Kingdom, in actual and at 1990 prices, for each year since 1978-79; and what was the percentage increase or decrease for each year.

Miss Widdecombe: Details of social security spending in Great Britain are given in the table. Information about social security spending in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Grand total social security spending

1990-91 (estimated)	59,001	59,001	3·7
1991-92 (plans)	66,167	62,422	5·8

Note: Reduction in real terms expenditure for the years 1987-88 and 1989-90 was due to the effect of reduced levels of unemployment.

Unemployment Costs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total current cost of unemployment to the Exchequer, including benefits, redundancy fund payments, administrative costs, lost revenue and any other identifiable costs.

Mr. Jack: Benefit expenditure on the unemployed is expected to be £4,850 million in 1990-91. The cost of administering unemployment benefit in 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available, was £176 million. For other benefits it is not possible to identify separately the administration costs attributable to the unemployed.

Redundancy fund payments are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, who advises that in 1990-91 redundancy fund payments totalled £141 million. Estimates of tax revenue forgone are not available.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of people in receipt of cold weather payments in each of the Scottish and English regions and Wales for each of the last five years; and what was the cost of these, by regions.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of people in receipt of cold weather payments, together with their costs, for the period 1985-89 is available in the Library.

Information for 1989-90 and 1990-91 will be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

Water Rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide a water rate rebate system for those on low incomes;

(2) if he will introduce an additional element into the income support system to give extra payments to all persons who have water bills in excess of £50 per adult person in that household.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. Income-related benefits are intended to cover all normal living expenses, including those for utilities such as water and fuel.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what length of lease is required in the establishment of a care home trust to satisfy his Department that the home is truly independent.

Mr. Scott: In determining entitlement to income support, the adjudication officer has no regard to the length of lease under which the independent home was established.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for income support by residents of care home trusts have so far been refused by his Department; and what were the main reasons for refusal.

Mr. Scott: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether residents of local authority care homes which have been redesignated under schedule 8 of the National Health Service Act 1977 are entitled to claim housing benefit and income support.

Mr Scott: People whose accommodation is provided under this legislation may claim income support up to an amount equivalent to the current basic rate of retirement pension to meet the minimum charge for the accommodation. They are not entitled to housing benefit.

ENERGY

Radioactive Material (Storage)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his present policy in respect of the dry storage of radioactive material.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Other than on licensed nuclear sites, no person shall keep, use or cause or permit to be kept or used, radioactive material unless he is registered under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 or exempted from being so. The storage of all radioactive material on licensed nuclear sites must be approved by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate under the terms of the site licences.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of his Ministers has been given responsibility for energy use by his Department; and what is his or her brief regarding energy efficiency.

Mr. Baldry: I have responsibility for energy efficiency within the Department of the Environment.

My aim is to reduce the Department's own energy consumption by 15 per cent. in real terms over the next five years, in line with the target adopted generally for the Government estate. To this end I am encouraging the Department to implement all practicable energy efficiency schemes and to promote staff awareness of the benefits of saving energy.

As part of the Secretary of State's responsibility for environmental policy we aim to increase public awareness of the link between energy efficiency and the threat of climate change due to the greenhouse effect. The Department's leaflet, "Wake up to what you can do for the Environment", published on 4 March, gives advice on improving energy efficiency in the home and on the road.

We are taking specific measures to increase the energy efficiency of the housing stock. Amendments to the Building Regulations which came into effect on 1 April 1990 should achieve a 20 per cent. improvement in the energy efficiency of new houses, and we will monitor them to see how they can be further improved. We will consider how best to develop and encourage the application of energy labelling schemes for buildings, with the intention of incorporating labelling into the Building Regulations. A model developed by DOE's Building Research Establishment is already in use for assessing the energy requirements of housing.

My Department is running the greenhouse demonstration programme to provide examples of effective energy efficiency in local authority housing. General local authority housing repair and maintenance programmes are supplemented by our estate action programme, targeting particularly rundown council estates. Around a quarter of the money spent is on heating and insulation measures. In private sector housing the new home renovation grants regime enables local authorities to help less well-off people in housing which is not energy efficient. A substantial new programme of research will be undertaken into the barriers to increased energy efficiency in the housing stock.

We are also encouraging local authorities to improve the energy efficiency of their own buildings. During May my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside and I will be addressing a series of seminars organised with the energy efficiency office for local government on the environmental and financial benefits of energy efficiency.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the measures he is taking in order to reduce or stabilise carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2000.

Mr. Baldry: The Government announced last May that, if other countries take similar action, we will stabilise United Kingdom emissions of carbon dioxide at 1990 levels by 2005. Taking account of our policies on other greenhouse gases, achieving this target would reduce the global warming potential of Britain's emissions to some 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2005. The Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" published last September set out the first tranche of measures that the Government proposed to take to achieve this.

Empty Properties

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties owned by local authorities have stood empty (a) for over six months or (b) for over one year; how many properties owned and administered by his Department have been vacant (i) for over six months or (ii) for over one year; and what is the regional distribution of these properties.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of their dwellings vacant for between six and 12 months and over a year in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1). The latest figures are published in columns A178 (six to 12 months) and col. A188 (over a year) of "1990 HIP1-Regional Grossing", a copy of which is in the Library.

The regional breakdown of Crown freehold properties on the common user estate with at least 90 per cent. vacancy are given below:

Outstation	Properties vacant for 6 to 12 months	Properties vacant for more than a year
Scotland	—	10
North East	—	1
North West	—	3
Midlands	2	2
Thames North	—	—
Thames South	1	3
Central London	—	1
TOTAL	7	27

Housing

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 30 local authorities with the highest generalised needs index private stock indicator scores, giving in each case their respective scores on this indicator and the allocation which each received for specified capital grants in 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: Following are the 30 authorities with the highest total of private sector stock condition and private defective dwellings generalised needs index scores:

	Private sector stock condition score	Defective dwellings score	Total	Allocation for specified capital grant (£000)
Birmingham	164·0	82·3	246·4	21,973

Staffordshire Moorlands	13·9	15·7	29·6	2,748
Bromley	21·8	7·6	29·4	2,137

The allocation of resources for specified capital grants is neither a limit nor a target for the level of grants which an authority may receive. It is made partly in relation to needs index scores, but also reflects local authorities' individual needs and circumstances which are taken into account by the Department's regional controllers in recommending the allocation.

District Auditors

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in each of the last three years district auditors have drawn attention in their reports to the costs incurred in answering community charge payers' or ratepayers' questions.

Mr. Key: Such information is not held centrally by either the Department or the Audit Commission.

Urban Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will break down the number of urban programme projects not approved for the 1991-92 financial year by local authority (a) numerically and (b) by cash value; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will indicate the percentage of projects not approved for the urban programme 1991-92 relating to (a) ethnic minority projects, (b) projects relating to disability, (c) economic development and (d) the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Northampton Employment and Training Unit

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to ensure that the district auditor of Northampton borough council makes public his report into the Northampton employment and training unit.

Mr. Key: Except in certain specified circumstances, the appointed auditor is prohibited by section 30 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 from disclosing information obtained pursuant to his duties, and the Secretary of State has no powers to set aside that prohibition. However, when such a report comes to be formally considered by the authority it will, in effect, be made public under the provisions of section 18(5) of that Act. If the Local Government Finance (Publicity for Auditors' Reports) Bill were to be enacted, auditors' immediate reports in the public interest would be made public immediately upon receipt by the authority.

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes have been sold in the constituency of Leicestershire, North-West including Shepshed.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 21 March 1991]: Information is not available for sales by parliamentary constituency. A table showing the available information on sales for each

English local authority since April 1979 was recently placed in the Library (Official Report, volume 184, column 542).

Gulf Marine Environment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the interference to (a) the feeding habits and (b) the breeding patterns of dugongs in the northern Gulf waters arising from (i) the oil slicks discharged from Kuwaiti oil terminals and (ii) the explosion of sea mines.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The assessments available to me indicate that dugongs are vulnerable to damage which oil pollution can cause to the seagrass beds on which they feed in the shallow waters of the western Gulf. I have no information on particular risks to dugongs posed by explosion of mines, but no mortalities have yet been reported. The current location of the spill is to the north of the main dugong habitats.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work of the Plymouth marine laboratory of the Natural Environment Research Council in relation to the Gulf.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The Plymouth marine laboratory of NERC has compiled an assessment of the likely biological effects of the Gulf oil spill, copies of which are available in the Library. We are continuing to seek its advice on this topic and to make its expertise and that of other United Kingdom marine environment science bodies known to the Gulf states.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which countries have donated defensive booms for work in the Gulf.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: According to the list provided by the International Maritime Organisation, equipment donated to the Gulf states for preventing oil pollution, recovering oil, or clean-up has so far been provided by Australia, Canada, Germany, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest information from the International Maritime Organisation on the movement of oil slicks in the Gulf.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The latest reports from the International Maritime Organisation indicate that a large slick remains positioned along the Saudi coast north of Abu Ali island with further patches of light oil between 10 and 60 miles offshore. Small amounts of oil continue to leak into the northern Gulf in Kuwaiti waters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to protect the sea grass in the Gulf.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The best prospect for protecting sea grass beds from the effects of the Gulf oil slick is likely to come from rapid recovery operations directed at the remaining oil floating on the surface before it breaks up and sinks. I described to the hon. Member on 15 March at column 1385-86 the UK's contribution to counter-pollution measures in the region.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests he has had from Gulf states for monitoring equipment for oil slick-related problems.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The UK has had no direct requests from the Gulf states for equipment of this type.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he is doing to establish the presence of dioxins in the Gulf; and whether the crude oil contains hydrogens.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: None directly, but the Meteorological Office research aircraft may be able to obtain relevant data on the composition of the plumes from the oil fires.

Blue Asbestos Dust

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the dangers posed to human health of blue asbestos dust particles distributed in smoke from the fire at the railway carriage storage yard in Leicester on 10 March.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: An extensive monitoring programme was initiated by Leicester city council soon after the onset of the fire at the railway storage yard. No asbestos fibres were detected in any of the samples taken. It was concluded therefore that the risk to the general public from this incident was very low. It is recognised, however, that such fires involving asbestos cause concern and therefore the Department has sponsored research on this subject for some years. Updated advice on asbestos in fires has just been published by the Department in the revised edition of "Asbestos Materials in Buildings", a free copy of which was sent to all local authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work of the world conservation monitoring centre in Cambridge in relation to the Gulf.

Mr. Baldry: [holding answer 21 March 1991]: As I indicated to the honourable Member on 15 March at column 1384 I pay tribute to the work of the world conservation monitoring centre in Cambridge, who have carried out regular assessments of the ecological resources of the Gulf states and how the oil slick and smoke plumes are likely to affect them.

Birds (The Gulf)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding has been given to the RSPCA team to train local volunteers in the cleaning of oiled birds in Saudi Arabia, Bahrain and Qatar.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs indicated in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 15 February 1991 at column 609, his Department provided the transport costs for the RSPCA team.

Care Home Trusts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken of the establishment of local authority care home trusts in the calculation of social services departments' standard spending assessments.

Mr. Key: The standard spending assessment (SSA) for social services for the elderly includes as an indicator the proportion of elderly people in each social services authority resident in an independent, registered home. An increase in this proportion reduces an authority's SSA. This is because residents of independent homes do not receive financial assistance from local authorities. Where a care home trust is established the number of residents will be included in the independent homes indicator.

Credit Approvals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his practice to issue supplementary credit approvals only to those local authorities which have received European regional development fund support.

Mr. Key: My Department issues supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) to local authorities for a variety of purposes. Authorities in receipt of European regional development fund support for projects falling within the other services block and the urban programme are eligible for SCAs associated with such projects. But SCAs are also available to all authorities undertaking certain types of project. For 1991-92, these include housing special programmes (such as estate action), urban initiatives and, within other services, a variety of initiatives concerned with waste disposal and environmental quality.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took of the level of European regional development fund receipts when calculating the credit levels within the other services block for local authorities.

Mr. Key: The Government take anticipated European Community receipts into account at the national level when setting the level of public expenditure programmes, with the result that these programmes are higher than they would otherwise be.

The majority of capital resources on the other services block are distributed between individual local authorities in the form of block allocations on the basis of formulae recommended by the local authority associations. No explicit account is taken in this distribution of whether expenditure may be financed in part through grant from the European Community. However, in addition, the Government are distributing £25 million of credit approvals within the other services block in 1990-91 to authorities in receipt of European regional development fund grant on projects falling within this block. For 1991-92, it is planned to distribute £45 million for such projects.

Gipsies, Middlejoy

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about delays in announcing his decision about the proposed gipsy site at Middlejoy, Somerset; what are the reasons for those delays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations from six persons or bodies including the hon. Member. He will issue the decision on this difficult and controversial case as soon as possible.

Royal Arsenal, Woolwich

Mr. John Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of work carried out for the Property Services Agency at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich by CITEC Electric Ltd.; and when the company will receive payment.

Mr. Yeo [pursuant to the answer, 8 March 1991, Official Report, column 299]: The total value of work carried out for the Property Services Agency at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich by CITEC Electric Ltd. is £20,029·29 inclusive of VAT, which has been paid to the company in full.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Expenditure

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis the Overseas Development Administration uses planned aid expenditure for 1990-91 rather than actual expenditure when calculating planned increases between the current financial year and future financial years.

Mrs. Chalker: As I explained to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley on 20 March at column 120, figures for actual expenditure in 1990-91 will not be available until autumn 1991.

SCOTLAND

RENAVAL Programme

Dr Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars) on 15 March, Official Report, column 713, if he will place in the Library a copy of the programme of measures under the terms of the RENAVAL community programme which was submitted to the European Commission on 18 December 1990.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The programme is still the subject of discussion with the European Commission. I should be happy to send the hon. Member a copy of the programme when it has been approved.

Nuclear Energy Agreement

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he made of the likely impact on the Scottish electricity industry of being bound to the nuclear energy agreement for a period of 15 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The nuclear energy agreement is central to the privatisation of the two Scottish electricity companies, securing abundant supplies of baseload nuclear power at stable market-related prices for the next 15 years.

Private Electricity Generation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to provide for private generators of electricity from renewable energy sources in Scotland that are unable to take advantage of the non-fossil fuel obligation which applies in England.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to do so.

Crime Prevention Week

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what financial and other resources are being given to local authorities in order to promote crime prevention initiatives for Crime Prevention Week;

(2) what financial and other resources are to be given to local voluntary groups for Crime Prevention Week; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what financial and other resources are to be given to (a) local authorities and (b) local voluntary groups to build upon the work and activities of Crime Prevention Week.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The Crime Prevention Week is a Home Office initiative which does not extend to Scotland. Crime prevention publicity is undertaken in Scotland through the Secretary of State's crime prevention committee. The committee has recently developed a new national publicity campaign with a distinctly Scottish flavour. The first phase of the campaign, which ran for the whole of February, involved a new Scottish television commercial and extensive press advertising at national and local level to highlight the level of opportunistic crime and to promote the merits of domestic and vehicle security measures. Associated with the campaign is also a new Scottish version of the crime prevention handbook—"The Family Guide"—which is being widely distributed.

TRANSPORT

Wing Mirrors

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made on the effectiveness of the design of wing mirrors in the avoidance of accidents.

Mr. Chope: The Department has commissioned the Transport and Road Research Laboratory to investigate the effectiveness of wing mirrors as part of a wider research project.

M11 Link, Leyton

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many advance works have been undertaken, are being undertaken and are planned to be undertaken on property along, and adjacent to, the route of the Government's proposed M11 motorway link in Leyton.

Mr. Chope: In addition to those referred to in my answer on 16 November (Vol. 180, column 233), work is to start shortly on modifications to the London Underground structures, Gainsborough road bridge and Whipps Cross tunnel. Noise insulation has been carried out on residential properties close to the bridge and tunnel works, and further homes will be offered secondary double glazing prior to the start of the main works. The advance diversion of services is almost complete.

Internal work is being carried out in Leytonstone House hospital so that areas which will be adjacent to the road works can be vacated before construction begins on the A12 link road between M11 and Hackney Wick.

M3 Extension, Winchester

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will seek funding from the private sector, to be repaid from tolls, in order to meet the incremental cost of building a tunnel to accommodate the proposed extension to the M3 between Bar End and Hockley Cross roads at Winchester.

Mr. Chope: No. We have no intention of reopening the joint decision by the Secretaries of State on this much-needed scheme which followed 20 years of debate and four public inquiries.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he makes in assessing grant levels to London Regional Transport of the cost of promoting private Bills.

Mr. Freeman: No separate provision is made for the cost of the promotion of private Bills when setting levels of grant for London Transport. These costs are included by London Transport in the total investment expenditure proposals which it puts forward in support of its requests for Government grant.

Holloway Road (Accident)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the accident, in which one person died, on the Holloway road in Islington on 8 March; and if he will make a statement on road safety on red routes.

Mr. Chope: The Metropolitan police are still investigating the circumstances of a fatal accident which occurred on a pedestrian crossing in Holloway road, south of Landseer road, in the afternoon of 8 March.

Road safety will be included in the monitoring exercise for the red route pilot scheme to be carried out during 1991.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Zeebrugge Ferry Disaster

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek a review of the judge's ruling in the case relating to the Zeebrugge ferry disaster; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: On 11 December 1990 I informed the legal representatives of all parties to the proceedings that I had decided, with the advice of leading counsel, that no point of law of general application arose warranting reference to the Court of Appeal under section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1972.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-British citizens of New Commonwealth origin, including British overseas citizens and British dependent territory citizens, are currently settled in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is available only on the number of citizens of New Commonwealth countries usually resident in Great Britain, excluding British overseas citizens and British dependent territories citizens. According to the labour force surveys there were about 540,000 such citizens in 1987-89, including students. Not all these persons will have settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 142, to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz), if he will list those categories of foreign nationals from countries from where immigrant arrivals in the United Kingdom normally need a visa for entry who are exempt; and on how many occasions a waiver dispensation has been instituted since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the visa exemption scheme and the 10 nationalities to which it applies are set out in the document referred to in the answer of 6 February. Visa regimes incorporating the scheme have been introduced on five occasions. There is in addition a long-standing transit without visa concession for airline passengers booked on an onward flight within 24 hours. The concession does not, however, apply to nationals of Sri Lanka and Iraq, or to nationals of Iran, Lebanon, Libya, Syria, Turkey and Somalia if they seek to pass through immigration control.

London Fire Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has any proposals for the reinstatement of the pump appliance at Woodford fire station, temporarily withdrawn on 31 March 1979;

(2) if he will provide details of the current disposition of reserve fire appliances in the London Fire Brigade;

(3) if his Department envisages any reduction in the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority's budgets for the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he has received any proposal from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority for the reinstatement of a second operational fireboat in the London Fire Brigade.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is for the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority, in the light of its statutory and fiscal responsibilities, to determine its budget for any financial year and the disposition of appliances and other resources consistent with the need to conform to the minimum nationally recommended standards of fire cover. It is not required to seek the Home Secretary's approval to reinstatement or increases in the number of appliances, reserves of which are currently understood to be 85 fire pumps (including 18 for training purposes) and 17 special appliances.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action has been taken by the LFCDA to implement recommendations Nos. 26, 30 and 109 of the Fennell inquiry report on the London Fire Brigade;

(2) what action has been taken by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority to implement a review of sub-ground radio communications in the London Fire Brigade in line with the recommendation of the Fennell report.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has updated its procedures and related training for handing over and assuming command during major incidents. A scheme to train operational personnel in fire prevention has been developed and is being implemented. The authority has also been working with London Underground Ltd. to improve sub-surface radio communications for firefighters. A programme of improvements includes the provision of a radio base station and associated work initially at 44 sub-surface railway stations and then to all others.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has any proposals to implement a trial of a warbling mobilising system at fire stations in the London Fire Brigade.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: It is understood that the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority, following a trial, has decided to replace electro-mechanical bells at fire stations with a system which produces a similar sound electronically.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has any proposals to equip fire rescue unit appliances with geiger counters for use at incidents involving radiation.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Each of the six rescue tenders in the London Fire Brigade is equipped with three survey meters and one contamination meter. All front-line appliances are equipped with one dosimeter per firefighter.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of fire stations in the London Fire Brigade, showing the establishment of (a) black and (b) female operational firefighters based at each fire station.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Information about ethnic minority and women operational firefighters in the London Fire Brigade is not collected in the form requested. The following information is contained in the brigade's establishment scheme in force on 1 January 1991, as notified to the Home Office by the chief fire officer:

London Fire Brigade: ethnic minority and women wholetime operational staff in post on 1 January 1991

	Number
Ethnic minorities
(a) Afro-Caribbean	[1]144
(b) Asian (Indian sub-continent)	30
(c) Other	54
Women	[2]47

Notes:
[1] Includes 5 women.
[2] Includes 5 Afro-Caribbean.

Female Circumcision

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will establish a nationwide police squad to co-ordinate the prevention and suppression of female circumcision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so. The police will continue to make every effort to enforce the law against this practice.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he is making under the terms of his Department's authorised disputes procedures for his trans-Pennine area manager for prisons to meet representatives of the Prison Officers Association before 1 April to discuss staffing levels at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield.

Mrs. Rumbold: A meeting under the national disputes procedure has been arranged for Tuesday 9 April. The Trans-Pennine area manager will attend this meeting along with national representatives of prison service management and the prison officers associations.

Stuart Bower

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when there will be a decision on the case of Stuart Bower, the former West Yorkshire police officer.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend hopes to reach a decision on the case shortly. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as a decision has been reached.

Devon (Petty Sessional Divisions)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce his decision regarding mergers of petty sessional divisions in the county of Devon; and if he will treat this as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I hope to make an announcement very shortly.

HEALTH

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether national health service trusts will report directly to their regional health authority rather than his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National health service trusts will be accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and Parliament via the national health service management executive. They will not report directly to their regional health authority.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will provide additional funding to Doncaster health authority to enable paediatric wards to be kept open.

Mr. Dorrell: Trent regional health authority is responsible for the allocation of funds to districts in its region. I understand that in 1991-92 Doncaster health authority will receive an initial cash allocation for its resident population which is 10·8 per cent. higher than it would have been in 1990-91 on a similar basis.

Bath Health Authority Houses

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether tenancy agreements have now been entered into by the residents of the Bath health authority houses which were the subject of legal action brought by C. and G. Homes Ltd.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that Bath district health authority hopes to complete the tenancy agreements in the week commencing 25 March 1991. There has been some delay because of the need to appoint signatories for several of the residents.

Disabled People

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Disabled Persons Act 1986 has been implemented with the exception of sections 1, 2 and 3 and sections 7, 8(2) and (3).

Sections 1 and 2 would provide for the setting up of a formal system of authorised representatives to be appointed either by the disabled person himself or, if he is unable to do so due to physical or mental incapacity, by the local authority. Section 3 would require local authorities to give a disabled person or his authorised representative the right to make representations about the need for services, to be given on request a statement of the assessed needs and services to be provided, and to make representations about any such statement.

Consultations with the local authority associations on what it would cost to implement these sections have been completed recently. The associations estimate these costs at about £28 million a year in England at November 1989 prices, including £18 million to establish and run a formal system of authorised representatives under all three sections.

The objectives of these sections are to give disabled people a greater say in decisions affecting their ability to live independent lives in the community. We fully endorse those objectives and have taken great care to see that they are fully reflected in the provisions of the Children Act 1989 and the new arrangements for community care under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and associated policy guidance.

Under the provisions of the 1989 Children Act from 14 October 1991 disabled children will have the same protection which they enjoy currently only if they are taken into care. One of its key features is the emphasis on the need for parents, the child and others connected with the child to participate fully in decisions about service provision in partnership with local authorities. The Act also provides for a representations procedure with an independent element to consider complaints and other representations from parents, the child and others connected with the child.

The new community care arrangements, which will be fully implemented by April 1993, have a wider scope than the Disabled Persons Act 1986 in that they cover all people affected by ageing or disability and give greater recognition to the needs of carers. They reflect and amplify sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons Act in a number of specific ways. From 1 April 1991 local authorities are required by directions under section 50 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act to have procedures for considering representations about needs and services. Anyone acting on behalf of a disabled person can make representations, including complaints, about needs and services, and local authorities are obliged to consider them.

When the community care arrangements are fully implemented, local authorities will need to have in place assessment arrangements covering all community care needs. For people with communication difficulties arising from sensory impairment, mental incapacity or other disabilities local authorities have been advised that they will need to take positive steps to ensure that they can participate fully in the assessment process and in the determination of service provision. Written statements of the results of assessments and any services to be provided will be supplied on request. These requirements have been set out by the Department in the document "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond: Policy Guidance" (HMSO, 1990).

The Department is preparing good practice information and material designed to assist authorities to give effect to the community care policy guidance. This will include material on representation and advocacy including the development of local advocacy schemes. In addition, we are giving financial support to a number of voluntary organisations which assist disabled people to make representations about needs or services either through peer support or the provision of advocates or companions.

Disabled people within the meaning of the 1986 Act will retain their right under section 4 of that Act to an assessment of needs and a decision on services and where a need for services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 has been established to have those services provided.

In the context of these substantial and wide-ranging provisions which provide protection for disabled people, to impose on local authorities the additional requirements of sections 1, 2 and 3 could carry the danger of diverting resources into complex administrative arrangements at the expense of services. We have therefore decided not to implement these sections, but we will review the situation again in the light of experience of the new arrangements.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of local authority care homes which currently fail to meet the requirements of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Registered Homes Act does not apply to local authority residential care homes. Information about standards in local authority homes compared with those expected of registered homes is not collected by the Department. From April this year local authorities are required to have arms length inspection units charged with inspecting and reporting on both local authority and registrable independent residential care homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the capital expenditure required by local authorities to bring their care homes up to the physical standards required by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 24 January at column 294.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a statement on his policy towards care home trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Further guidance to local authorities planning to transfer their residential care homes to trusts or other agencies will be issued soon.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each local authority or health authority which has a policy of not sponsoring elderly persons resident in care or nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Returns submitted by local authorities to the Department indicate that all local authorities sponsor elderly people in independent sector residential care homes.

We are not aware of any health authority which has a policy of not sponsoring elderly persons resident in nursing homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the average unit cost of bed spaces in (a) local authority residential homes, (b) private care homes, (c) private nursing homes and (d) voluntary homes for elderly persons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available. The gross cost per place filled (excluding capital charges) for local authorities' own residential care homes for elderly people is given in table F17 of "Key Indicators of Local Authority Social Services" publication. The latest available information is for 1988-89; a copy of which is in the Library.

King's College Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reasons have been given to him by King's college hospital for the late notification to his Department of the abortion of the King's college baby in September 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The legal responsibility for notifying a termination of pregnancy to the Chief Medical Officer lies with the doctor who performed the termination and not with the hospital. Several terminations were performed at King's college hospital during September 1989.

North Middlesex Hospital Trust

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names, addresses and qualifications of the directors of the North Middlesex hospital trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The names of the chairmen and non-executives of the North Middlesex National Health Service trust are available from the Library.

Non-executive directors are chosen for the personal contribution they can make to the effective management of the trust rather than for particular formal qualifications they hold. The chief executive is appointed by the chairman and non-executive directors. Other executive directors are appointed by the chairman, the non-executive directors and the chief executive and the appointments are thus a matter for the trust itself. The qualifications for executive directors are laid down in the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 paragraph 4. (S.I. 1990, No. 2024).

Information about the chief executive and other executive directors can be obtained from the chairman.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the administrative costs of running the headquarters of each regional health authority in England including staffing and maintenance costs but excluding service delivery functions such as ambulance and blood transfusion services.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 February 1991]: Figures derived from the 1989-90 annual accounts of the regional and district health authorities in England are shown in the table. Regions are managed in an integrated way and it would be misleading to interpret regional health authority data in isolation from that for the districts they manage. The region totals provide a more valid picture.

With the variety of management and support functions provided by regional and district health authorities it is not practicable to exclude those costs at headquarters levels which are more directly concerned with the operational management of service delivery.

Notes:

1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and local levels: such costs are regarded as operational.
2. The expenditure by each region will be influenced by a number of factors such as the size of the total budgets managed, the population served and the number of health authorities involved all of which differ between regions.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The Gulf

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will request the United Nations Security Council to authorise an emergency special session of the United Nations General Assembly under the provisions of United Nations resolution 377A(V) to deal with the diplomatic resolution of the Gulf war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no need for an emergency special session of the United Nations General Assembly to discuss the Gulf crisis. Nor is there any basis under the United Nations Charter for General Assembly action. The Security Council has fully exercised its charter responsibility for international peace and security throughout the crisis, and remains actively seized of the matter.

Egypt

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made to exchange civil prisoners with Egypt.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are negotiating a prison transfer agreement with Egypt that would enable prisoners to serve the remainder of their sentences in their home country.

The Egyptians are still considering the matter. We shall continue to press them for an agreement.

United Nations Association

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if her Majesty's Government will increase its grant to the United Kingdom United Nations Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: After careful consideration of all the applications for grants-in-aid, against the background of available resources, a further sum of £24,000 was agreed for the UNA for the financial year 1991-92, subject to parliamentary approval. We have no plans to increase this.

Middle East Oil

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) of 13 November 1990, Official Report, columns 115-16, if he will update the capacity figures for Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil refineries following the Gulf war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total refining capacities for Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil refineries, which I gave the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) in my answer of 13 November 1990 at col. 115, remain unchanged following the Gulf war. We do not yet know, however, to what extent the operational capabilities of the refineries in Kuwait may have been damaged during hostilities.

Arms Control

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet non-governmental organisations on arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I plan to host a meeting with non-governmental organisations on arms control, disarmament and non-proliferation issues on 14 May.

Mrs. Maureen Paleschi

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communication Her Majesty's ambassador in Cairo has had recently with Mrs. Maureen Paleschi, currently in prison.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Consular officers from the embassy at Cairo visit Mrs. Paleschi regularly, most recently on 5 March 1991 when the consul found her well and in good spirits.

Middle East

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of the case for elections to determine the representatives of the Palestinians; and what estimate has been made of the effect of such elections on creating delay in the holding of an international conference on the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We support proposals for a dialogue between Israel and representative Palestinians. They could discuss among other things possible arrangements for elections in the occupied territories. This could be a useful step in preparing for an international conference which we think will be needed at the appropriate time.

Seal Culling

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Canadian Government expressing opposition to any increase in seal culling.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to do so as we are not aware of any Canadian plans for seal culling outside accepted international conservation practices.

Iraq

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 716, to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on contacts with opposition groups in Iraq, what information he has on opposition groups' proposals for the franchise as part of proposed democratic reforms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iraqi opposition envisage free and fair multi-party elections under universal adult suffrage.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for giving practical assistance to the Kurdish population of Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are co-operating closely with the International Committee of the Red Cross in its admirable efforts to provide humanitarian assistance throughout Iraq, including in areas not controlled by Saddam Hussein's regime.

Soviet Union

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with Ministers and other high officials from the autonomous Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None, although we are keen to expand our links with all authorities in the Soviet Union where this would bring practical benefit.

Correspondence

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Office's East African Department will acknowledge or reply to letters sent on 4 December 1990, 10 December 1990, and 26 February 1991, by Messrs. Owston and Co. Solicitors, 44 Long street, Wigston, Leicestershire, in relation to the case of Mr. A. C. Patel of Westfield avenue, Wigston Fields, Leicestershire.

Mrs. Chalker: Messrs Owston & Co. were sent a reply to their letters on 20 March. The issues raised in the correspondence are not straightforward and involve consultation with a number of others both inside and outside the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information his Department maintains on the size of work forces of different employers, or of the largest work forces, in individual travel-to-work areas or constituencies.

Mr. Jackson: The information held by my Department reflects the PAYE arrangements of employers. Large employers provide separate returns on numbers of employees covered by each PAYE scheme. We have no means of aggregating returns in respect of different PAYE schemes for a particular employer.

The information is provided in confidence to the Department. Details of the largest work forces in a travel-to-work area or constituency would risk revealing the identity of individual employers and could not be released without their express permission.

Training

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there are any age limits on entry into the employment training scheme; and whether he has any plans to introduce an age limit.

Mr. Jackson: People aged 18-59 inclusive are eligible to enter ET if they meet the qualifying conditions set out in the contract between the Secretary of State and training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training places funded or partly funded by his Department were available, and how many filled, in the parliamentary constituency of Tottenham in January 1989, January 1990 and January 1991.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available for the parliamentary constituency of Tottenham.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to ensure that Government Departments pay small business suppliers promptly.

Mr. Howard: All Government Departments are committed to ensuring that the timing of payment is normally stipulated in all contracts. If, however, there is no contractual provision or other understanding or accepted practice governing the timing of payment, departments' practice is to pay within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

I also draw attention to the recent CBI/Cork Gully survey which found that national public sector bodies cause less significant problems than large private sector firms. Indeed, of those who deal with such bodies, a significant proportion of respondents said they cause no problem.

However, we are not complacent about this record. During the 1991-92 financial year major spending Departments will be monitoring their payment performance and will make an annual return to my Department. The results will be published.

Cobalt UK

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the proposed closure of Cobalt UK in Liverpool.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 March 1991]: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have received representations from the chief executive and from trainees with Cobalt (UK), Liverpool about this matter. The decision not to offer Cobalt (UK) an employment training contract in Liverpool for 1991-92 was reached locally by my Department's training, enterprise and education directorate's, Merseyside area office in full consultation with the chief executive of the Merseyside training and enterprise council which is scheduled to become operational from 24 June 1991.

Cobalt UK Ltd. has, however, been offered an extension to its current ET contract which was due to terminate on 31 March 1991 in order that the managing down of their provision in Liverpool can be handled sensitively and individual trainees' entitlements honoured with the minimum disruption to their training.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has made any estimate of the effect of the proposed closure of Cobalt UK on the unemployment situation in Liverpool.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The proposed closure of Cobalt UK should not have an adverse effect on the unemployment situation in Liverpool. Other training providers in the area, who have achieved a better ratio of trainees into jobs, are able to offer similar provision in locations presently covered by Cobalt UK.

TECs are required to use their best endeavours to secure alternative training places for trainees affected by possible closures.

Labour Statistics, Leicestershire

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the unemployment figure was in North-West Leicestershire (a) in June 1983 and (b) at the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 March 1991]: In February 1991 there were 2,024 unemployed claimants in the North-West Leicestershire parliamentary constituency. This compares with 3,410 in June 1983. Comparisons at the level of parliamentary constituencies are affected by the changes in the coverage of the count that have occurred over the period; this particular comparison is also affected by seasonal influences.

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created in North-West Leicestershire since 1979.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 21 March 1991]: Estimates of changes in employment for parliamentary constituencies are available only from the censuses of employment. The latest available figures are for September 1987; the earliest are for September 1981. Between these two dates, the number of employees in employment in the North-West Leicestershire constituency increased by 600 or 1·8 per cent. The figures exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

DEFENCE

"Options for Change"

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department will make a further statement on "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 19 March at column 149 to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran).

British Legion

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next meet representatives from the Royal British Legion to discuss the rehabilitation of injured service men.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no plans at present to meet representatives from the Royal British Legion. However, Ministry of Defence officials are in regular contact with them about the rehabilitation and resettlement of injured service personnel.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 70, on what date in January he invited further bids for HMS Challenger; on what criteria he selected those to whom letters were sent inviting further bids; what were the terms of this renewed invitation to tender; what stage evaluation of the original bids has now reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend on 4 February at column 70.

Airports (Armed Personnel)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if MOD personnel on duty at Heathrow airport have been involved in any incidents since their regular deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were no incidents involving military personnel during their recent deployment at Heathrow airport.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what instructions are issued to military personnel regarding their authority in respect of civilians at Heathrow airport;

(2) if armed troops currently deployed in terminals at Heathrow airport have the power of arrest of civilians.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army units deployed at Heathrow airport operate under the instructions of the Metropolitan police, and all military patrols are accompanied by at least one police officer. Service men involved have no legal powers beyond those of any other citizen.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list all British airports where armed military personnel have been on regular duty during 1991.

(2) who requested the presence of armed military personnel in the terminals at Heathrow airport and when; and how much longer they will remain on duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Army units have been deployed in 1991 at Heathrow and Gatwick airports at the request of the Metropolitan and Sussex police forces respectively. The deployment at Heathrow airport, which began on 16 January 1991, was terminated on 10 March, and that at Gatwick on 20 January 1991, 48 hours after it commenced.

ASRAAM

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to prohibit the sale abroad of the advanced short-range air-to-air missile once it has been completed by the British missile production industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Present Government policy will continue. Applications for the export of any defence equipment will be considered in the light of circumstances prevailing at the time.

The Gulf

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken by British forces and their coalition allies to recover destroyed Iraqi military equipment abandoned in Kuwait for (a) scrap metal recycling and (b) rebuilding for civilian uses; and if he has made an estimate of the monetary scrap value of all destroyed military equipment left over from the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering arrangements for the disposal of Iraqi equipment captured by British forces. These may include recovery for use as hard targets or display exhibits, and disposal for recycling. We have no information on the monetary scrap value of all destroyed military equipment resulting from the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British, United States and other coalition forces are in Iraq; and if he will make a statement on their withdrawal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no British forces in Iraq. Coalition forces will withdraw from Iraq as soon as appropriate.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to recycling the materials of defunct and irreparably damaged vehicles and other British military equipment presently in Kuwait, southern Iraq or Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The small number of British vehicles which were seriously damaged during operations are being recovered to our logistic base in Saudi Arabia. Those that can be economically repaired will be returned to the United Kingdom or Germany. The remainder will be stripped of any useful items and arrangements will be made for the disposal of the residue, including recycling where appropriate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service women are deployed in the Gulf; and how many were involved in combat.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1991]: As at 28 February 1991 there were over 1,200 British service women deployed in the Gulf. No British service women were involved in combat.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the non-oil balance of payments in each year since 1979 at 1990 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information from which the balance of trade in non-oil goods at 1990 prices may be derived can be found in table A7 of the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics and its mid-year supplement, available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database which may also be accessed through the Library.

Civil Service (Pay Additions)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the cost to the Exchequer of special London pay points and of local pay additions in London, the south-east and south-west of England, for civil servants in each of the last five years; if he will break these costs down by Department; and if he will list the number of civil servants, by Department, who are in receipt of these additional payments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A breakdown of the information by Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. London spine points were first introduced in October 1988 for some groups of staff and by January 1990 had been extended to about 100,000 staff within the London weighting area—a radius of 18 miles from Charing Cross. The annual estimated cost is now £66 million. Local pay additions were first introduced in June 1988 and are now paid to about 63,000 staff with an annual estimated cost of £32·2 million, broken down as follows:

London	21·3
Rest of the South East	8·9
South West	0·3
Rest of the United Kingdom	1·7

Sports Ground Improvements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the funding to be raised by the proposed new foundation for sport and arts he proposes to be spent on the ground improvements required as a result of the Safety at Sports Grounds Act 1987 and the Taylor report.

Mr. Mellor: It will be for the trustees, not for me, to propose in detail how funds are allocated once the foundation is established. However, I understand from the proposers that it is not the intention to make funds available to clubs in the Football or Scottish Football Leagues, or to any of our national football stadia. They already benefit from the arrangements announced in last year's Budget for spending on safety improvements to grounds.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the reasons for the revision downwards of his calculation of European regional development fund receipts for the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 between the 1989 autumn statement and the 1990 autumn statement.

Mr. Mellor: Figures for European regional development fund receipts are not published in the autumn statement. However the downward revision in the estimates published in the 1991 Government expenditure plans compared to those in the 1990 plans are attributable to a number of factors, including Departments' estimates of the timing of receipts from the Commission and of the expected level of allocations to the United Kingdom of structural funds under the various structural fund objectives and Community support frameworks.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council and the meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union.

Mr. Maude: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 18 March. The intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union met later the same day. The Minister of State and I represented the United Kingdom at ECOFIN and I attended the IGC.

Progress was made towards a final agreement on special schemes for charging VAT in the country of destination on the following intra-EC transactions—private purchases of new vehicles; goods bought by mail order and other distance selling; and purchases by exempt or non taxable bodies.

The scope of reduced and zero VAT rates was also discussed. The Minister of State reiterated the importance for the United Kingdom of retaining our ability to continue to apply our present zero rates. The Council agreed to express a view on the approximation of VAT rates by 30 June.

Agreement was reached on an EC-wide increase in travellers' allowances for goods not subject to excise duty from 390 to 600 ecus (approximately £273 to £420) from 1 July 1991. Discussions continue on increases for excisable goods such as alcohol and tobacco.

It was agreed that the Commission's draft annual economic report was not out of date and that a revised version should be submitted to the Council for discussion and adoption in July.

The Council agreed in principle that a loan guaranteed by the Community budget could be offered to Bulgaria subject to certain conditions. The loan will be of an amount equal to the facilities offered by non-EC members of the G24 up to a maximum of $400 million dollars. The Commission was also invited to prepare a proposal for a similar facility for Romania.

The Council also adopted an opinion on the discharge of the 1989 EC budget following a presentation by the president of the European Court of Auditors. I stressed the importance of the court's work to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Community's expenditure and drew attention to the United Kingdom's ideas for increasing financial management and accountability in the Community which we have put forward in the intergovernmental conference on political union.

The ministerial meeting of the intergovernmental conference on EMU focused on monetary and institutional arrangements in any possible stage 3 of EMU, in particular the allocation of responsibility for external monetary policy and the organisational structure of any European system of central banks (ESCB). The United Kingdom, while taking an active part in these discussions, maintains its general reserve on the subject of stage 3, and in particular on any move to a single currency and single monetary policy.

There was broad agreement that, if there were a single currency and monetary policy, ECOFIN should be responsible for determining the exchange rate system, and that the proposed ESCB should be responsible for day-to-day intervention. Differences persisted between member states in the exact delineation of responsibilities. On the organisational structure of the ESCB, I argued that national central banks should be given the greatest possible degree of autonomy.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the real £ sterling/Deutschmark exchange rate, in purchasing power parity terms, between (a) the beginning of March 1988 and entry into the ERM in October 1990 and (b) entry into the ERM and the present.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 March 1991]: Following is the available information.

	Real Deutschmark/ sterling exchange rate
1990 1st quarter	2·70
1990 3rd quarter	2·96
1990 4th quarter	2·98

These figures are on a comparable basis to the historical series given in my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary's reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 22 October 1990 at columns 10-11.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing, for each year from 1979 to 1990 inclusive, (a) overseas investment in the United Kingdom, (b) overseas investment in the rest of the European Community taken together and (c) overseas investment in the United Kingdom as a percentage of overseas investment in the European Community as a whole, all figures to be based on OECD statistics, adjusted as necessary.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 March 1991]: The following table sets out the latest readily available comprehensive figures published by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) on direct investment in, and transactions in the portfolio investment liabilities of, the countries of the European Community. There are differences in definition which mean that the figures must be used with caution. In particular, there is a global discrepancy in the reporting of overseas capital flows to the IMF which is currently under investigation. Inward investment includes total investment into each country, both from other EC countries and from outside the EC.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Iraqi Nationals

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made in regard to Her Majesty's Government's policy on applications by Iraqi nationals applying for (a) leave to remain in and (b) entry to the United Kingdom since 15 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 18 January my right hon. Friend introduced an immigration rules change (HC 160) under which applications for visas, leave to enter or extensions of stay by Iraqi nationals fall to be refused. These restrictions were introduced as an exceptional measure following the outbreak of hostilities in the Gulf. We are keeping them under review and will relax them as soon as my right hon. Friend is satisfied that it is safe and consistent with the national interest to do so. In the meantime, discretion to grant applications outside the rules is being exercised in compassionate circumstances where we are satisfied no threat to national security is involved.

National Security Detainees

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many national security detainees were released from (a) Her Majesty's prison Wormwood Scrubs, (b) Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton and (c) any other prison establishments on 8 March 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 8 March 1991 nine Immigration Act detainees, held pending deportation on grounds of national security, were released from Her Majesty's prison Wormwood Scrubs and 24 from Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton. No other prison service establishments were holding these detainees.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken following the recommendation of the Home Affairs Committee in its fifth report of Session 1989-90 that applicants for naturalisation should be kept informed of the stage that their application has reached.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government undertook in their reply to the report (Cmnd 1368) to issue regularly bulletins on the progress of nationality work. The first such bulletin will issue shortly.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to immigration officers at ports of entry to the United Kingdom for the questioning of visitors from (a) Poland, (b) USSR, (c) India, (d) Chile, (e) Tanzania and (f) Taiwan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Instructions are not issued on the basis of nationality.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) naturalisation and (b) registration applications awaiting decision were made (i) before 1 January 1988, (ii) before 1 January 1989 and (iii) before 1 January 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 20 March 1991 the number of outstanding applications by date of application was as follows:

Application date	Naturalisation	Registration
Before 1 January 1988	16,351	11,155
Between 1 January 1988 and 31 December 1988	12,912	1,915
Between 1 January 1989 and 31 December 1989	16,756	2,441

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to deal with applications for variation of licence to stay in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an application for variation of leave to remain in the United Kingdom and the decision, for cases decided in caseworking groups and in the public inquiry offices in the fourth quarter of 1990, was a little under two months.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to issue explanatory statements by the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Records are not kept of individual processing times for all explanatory statements but it is estimated that at present the average time taken to prepare and despatch an explanatory statement to the immigration appellate authorities is about six months.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the current and projected processing times for applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation;

(2) how long the immigration and nationality department takes to determine applications for naturalisation as at 1 March;

(3) if he has set targets for the time that his Department should take to deal with applications for naturalisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average time taken for certificates of registration issued in February 1991 was 24 months and for certificates of naturalisation 36 months. Our objective is to reduce both the level of outstanding cases and waiting time as quickly as possible. The level of arrears is reducing considerably, but I cannot predict when precise waiting times will be achieved.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications on behalf of over-age dependants who have established relationship by means of DNA tests have been (a) considered, (b) granted, (c) refused and (d) are pending under his discretionary policy.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 466 applications involving over-age reapplicants have been reviewed under the terms of the concession announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) on 14 June 1989 at column 461. A total of 108 of these applications have been granted and 358 refused. A total of 159 applications are currently awaiting review under the terms of the 1989 concession.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what changes have been made to the length of tiime for which an invitation/sponsorship form approval is valid; when the period of validity dates from; and whether there are variations, by country, in the length of time such approvals are valid;

(2) if he will list the countries from which visitors to the United Kingdom have to fill in an invitation/sponsorship form for approval before being allowed entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is open to an entry clearance officer to seek up-to-date confirmation from a United Kingdom sponsor if he wishes to satisfy himself that the immigration rules as to maintenance and accommodation will be met in respect of any national seeking entry to the United Kingdom.

Deportation

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals issued with notices of intention to deport on national security grounds (a) in November/December 1990 and (b) in January 1991, (i) left the United Kingdom voluntarily, (ii) were handed over to the Ministry of Defence as prisoners of war and (iii) appeared before the national security panel.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The answer is as follows:

(a) (i) three; (ii) none; and (iii) three.
(b) (i) 56; (ii) 35; and (iii) 48.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Iraq and (b) other middle eastern countries have been issued with notices of intention to deport on national security grounds since November 1990; and how many in total were detained.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since November 1990, 144 Iraqis and 11 other nationals of middle eastern countries have been served with notices of intention to deport for reasons of national security, of whom 110 were detained.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals issued with notices of intention to deport on national security grounds (a) in November/December 1990 and (b) January 1991 and who appeared before the national security panel were, prior to 8 March 1991, (i) released with notices of intention to deport withdrawn, (ii) released on restrictions pending further investigation into the deportation decision, (iii) released pending the making of a deportation order, (iv) held in detention pending further investigation into the deportation decision and (v) held in detention pending the making of a deportation order.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The answer is as follows:

(a) (i) one; (ii) none; (iii) two; (iv) none; (v) none.
(b) (i) 14; (ii) seven; (iii) one; (iv) 25; (v) six.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant a visitor's permit to the spouse of a British citizen to enable that person to visit an hon. Member at his invitation, for discussions relating to the refusal of an entry certificate by an entry clearance officer in the Indian sub-continent so that that hon. Member, in whose constituency the spouse is resident, can determine how and whether to represent that person at an appeal against refusal of entry; and if he will confirm that, as the appellant will already have launched his appeal, the provisions of section 13(3) of the Immigration Act 1971 will not apply.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 14 March 1991 at column 656. All visa nationals who wish to visit the United Kingdom, whatever the purpose of the journey, must apply for an entry clearance at a British diplomatic post overseas. The entry clearance officer would consider such an application under the relevant requirements of the immigration rules (paragraph 22 of HC 251).

By virtue of section 13(3) of the Immigration Act 1971, an applicant who holds a current entry clearance has a right of appeal in the United Kingdom against a decision to refuse him leave to enter the United Kingdom. However, a person has no right to enter or remain in the United Kingdom because there is an appeal outstanding against a previous refusal of an entry clearance.

Family Law

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each Government grant to organisations active in relation to family and divorce law and its operation in the past year.

Mr. John Patten: A list of all voluntary organisations funded by Government Departments was placed in the Library when details of grants made in 1988-89 were announced on 11 May last year at columns 254-55. Similar details of grants made in 1989-90 are planned to be announced shortly in the same way.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time between the lodging of an appeal and its determination by an immigration appeal tribunal.

The Attorney-General: It is estimated that in those cases where leave to appeal is granted the average time between the lodging of an appeal and its determination by the immigration appeal tribunal is four to six months, depending on the length of time it takes the parties to prepare for the hearing.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were pending hearing before the immigration appeal tribunals on (a) 1 March 1989, (b) 1 March 1990 and (c) 1 March 1991, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The information required is set out in the table:

Number of cases pending before the immigration appeal tribunal

	Number
(a) 1 March 1989	262
(b) 1 March 1990	177
(c) 1 March 1991	360

The immigration appeal tribunal received 35 per cent. more cases in 1990 than in 1989, which accounts for the rise in the number of cases pending as at 1 March 1991. Additional resources have been made available to the IAT to cope with the increased work load, and the Lord Chancellor's Department will keep the IAT's work load under close review to ensure that the number of outstanding cases is kept as low as possible.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Attorney-General how soon Ramesh Kumar's appeal against refusal of entry clearance to the United Kingdom on 22 January will be heard; and whether any regard will be taken of compassionate circumstances surrounding the case when the date for hearing is fixed.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Kumar's appeal papers were received at the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) in London on 13 March 1991. On 15 March 1991 the IAA despatched the case papers to Mr. Kumar in India requesting that he nominate a representative by 15 May 1991. Once Mr. Kumar nominates a representative in the United Kingdom, and the representative has prepared for the hearing, the IAA will aim to list the case within two to three months. The listing of immigration appeal hearings is a matter for the IAA which gives full consideration to all requests made to it from either party for the early hearing of an appeal.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Attorney-General whether, under the provisions of section 22 of the Immigration Act 1971, an appellant against the refusal of entry into the United Kingdom as the spouse of a British citizen, has the right to be represented at an adjudication or before a tribunal by an hon. Member.

The Attorney-General: The Immigration Appeals (Procedure) Rules 1984 (SI 1984/2041) made under section 22 of the Immigration Act 1971 state that in proceedings before the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) the appellant, with the leave of the IAA, may be represented by any person appearing to the IAA to be acting on the appellant's behalf.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when his Department first became aware of the existence of documents relating to forensic tests carried out on 21 November 1974 on other ferry passengers besides the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: The DPP first became aware of such a document on or shortly after 8 October 1987 when he received a written statement by a scientist dated 5 October 1987.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General for what reason the statement taken by West Midlands police officers from the forensic scientist who conducted tests on passengers on the Liverpool to Belfast ferry was not made available to representatives of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings before their appeal in November 1987.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has asked for a report covering the handling of this statement. I will write to the hon. Member in the light of that report.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General for what reason the results of forensic tests carried out on passengers on the Liverpool to Belfast ferry on 21 November 1974 were not made available to the defence at the trial of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions was not aware at the time of the trial that such tests had been carried out.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when the statement taken from the forensic scientist who tested the hands of passengers on the Liverpool to Belfast ferry, which has recently come to light, was taken by West Midlands police force officers; and what other statements were taken in 1987 by West Midlands police officers in relation to the Birmingham pub bombings case.

The Attorney-General: The first statement by the scientist was taken on 5 October 1987. A further statement was taken from him on 19 October 1987. As to other statements taken in 1987, I will write to the hon. Member giving him such particulars as I am able to provide having regard to the practice whereby the names of persons who have given written statements to the police in the course of their inquiries are held in confidence and are disclosed only to the parties to legal proceedings, unless the makers of the statements consent to wider disclosure.

Child Care Law

Mr. Forman: To ask the Attorney-General what further steps have been taken to name the judiciary who will deal with child care cases in the higher courts under the Children Act 1989.

The Attorney-General: The Children Act 1989 is due to be implemented on 14 October 1991. Central to the philosophy of the Act is the principle that children's cases in the higher courts should be heard by judiciary who, by reason of their experience and training, are specialists in family work.

Under the Courts and Legal Services Act the Lord Chancellor has the power to nominate such judiciary with the concurrence of the president of the family division. The nomination process will extend over a period of months and began on 22 November 1990 with the announcement of the names of 47 circuit judges who are to be known as "designated family judges". As a second step in the process the Lord Chancellor has today, with the approval of the right honourable Sir Stephen Brown, president of the family division, named two further groups of specialist judges.

The first group comprises 49 circuit judges who will be known as "nominated care judges" and the second group consists of 127 district judges who will be responsible for the allocation of care cases, in the higher courts. Both groups will sit at the network of county court "care centres", the locations of which were announced on 22 November 1990.

The "nominated care judges" will deal with substantive hearings and emergency protection orders arising in child care cases transferred up from the magistrates courts. They will also have jurisdiction in family proceedings.

As their title suggests, the district judges responsible for the allocation of care cases will deal primarily with the allocation and timetabling of child care cases transferred from the magistrates courts. They will also be able to deal with emergency protection orders and interlocutory matters within transferred cases.

As announced on 4 May 1990, an extensive programme of judicial training is already under way. The nominated care judges and the district judges responsible for the allocation of care cases will receive training in the new procedures established by the Act. Special jurisdictional arrangements will operate in London where the district judges of the family division will have the same jurisdiction as the nominated care judges while also performing the role of district judges responsible for the allocation of care cases.

Lists showing the "care centre" locations together with the names of the nominated care judges and of the district judges responsible for the allocation of care cases have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Children Act Central Advisory Committee

Mr. Forman: To ask the Attorney-General who is to chair the Children Act central advisory committee announced by the Lord Chancellor on 9 July 1990.

The Attorney-General: Mrs. Justice Booth will chair this committee, now to be known as the Children Act advisory committee. The appointment will be for a two-year term.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nuclear Structure Facility

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils; and whether he discussed the funding of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the chairman of the ABRC on 15 January. At that meeting the board's advice on allocation of the science budget and other scientific matters were discussed. The future of the Science and Engineering Research Council's nuclear structure facility was not specifically mentioned.

Museums

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he has taken to assist museums to be able to respond to the demands to be made on them from classroom teachers who will be implementing the history national curriculum in terms of staff and other resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for funding staff at national museums rests with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts. Aside from independent museums, funding for local museums is in the main provided by local authorities. The Government will be providing some £170 million in specific grants in the 1991-92 financial year to help schools with the implementation of the national curriculum. It is up to each LEA to decide how to deploy the funds allocated to it, according to local needs and priorities.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has of the effect of his Department's circular regarding parents' financial support for school visits on the number of such visits to museums; and what action he plans to take.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has recently completed a review of the evidence of the effects of the charging provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988 and circular 2/89 on school activities and concluded that the evidence does not point to a need to change the law. Evidence was received from a range of sources and included a survey of a sample of schools and all local education authorities commissioned from the National Foundation for Educational Research. The evidence suggests that there has not been a significant change in the number of visits to museums since 1988.

Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of teachers employed by each education authority.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for January 1990 is contained in the DES statistical bulletin 5/91, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Non-teaching Staff

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of (a) non-teaching staff and (b) administrative staff employed centrally by each local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: Information on the number of full-time and part-time non-teaching staff employed by each local education authority has been placed in the Library. No information is available on the number of centrally employed administrative staff.

University Staff

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why he has decided to delay ratification of the agreement of committee A of the negotiating machinery for university academic and academic-related staff to increase London weighting with effect from 1 July 1990, through the committee B stage of the machinery.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No decision has been taken to delay: committee B is considering the proposal made to it by committee A on 13 February 1991 and will respond to it as soon as possible.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding arrangements were agreed between his Department, the Universities Funding Council and the CVCP, prior to the offer made by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals to the Association of University Teachers to increase the London allowance for university academic and academic-related staff, with effect from 1 July 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None. Funding is a matter for the Universities Funding Council.

Administration

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the amount of money held for the administration element of central services for each local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the replies of 21 February and 22 March to my hon Friend the Member for Harrow, West, (Mr. Hughes) at columns 235-38 and column 236.

More detailed figures are set out in part 1 of the authorities' LMS budget statements for 1990-91, prepared and published under section 42 of the Education Reform Act, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Vacation Hardship Allowance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in 1989-90 how much was paid out in vacation hardship allowance in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland;

(2) how many students received vacation hardship allowance in 1989-90 in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave in respect of England and Wales to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 13 March 1991, at column 516. Student support in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish orders to introduce geography and history in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have published today documents setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for geography and history in the national curriculum and have laid orders which will bring these documents into effect from the beginning of the next school year for pupils starting key stages 1, 2 and 3 (those aged five, seven and 11 in September).

The publication of these curriculum documents will ensure that pupils follow sensible and comprehensive courses of study in history and geography. The introduction of national curriculum requirements for these subjects will lead to high academic standards and worthwhile levels of achievement by pupils.

The documents which I am publishing today do not include a reduced course in geography for pupils at key stage 4 who are not taking a course leading to GCSE. I intend to publish shortly for consultation a further draft order concerning the reduced course.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is making separate orders to introduce geography and history arrangements in Welsh schools.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pharmaceuticals

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has concluded his deliberations on the European Commission's proposed regulation on patent term restoration for pharmaceuticals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government are still considering the Commission's proposal and intend to announce a position shortly.

Argentine Ballistic Missiles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if during his recent visit he discussed with the Argentine Government the Argentine Condor II ballistic missile project and the export controls required for such technology being developed by private industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 March 1991]: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Arms Spending

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to collate information on the percentage of gross domestic product spent on arms by countries which are recipients of aid from the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 13 March at column 517 we consider that there is room for improvement in such data, which are also included by the World bank in its "World Development Report" published annually. Such information is best collected on an international basis, and we are exploring how best this might be done.

Starvation

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of persons in the world who were starving, assessed on the basis of the OECD reports in 1961, 1971 and 1981.

Mrs. Chalker: According to the OECD no such assessments have been made. The most recent report available to us is the latest assessment by the World Food Programme that up to 29 million people may be at risk of starvation in 25 sub-Saharan African countries.

ENERGY

Electricity Generation

7. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning the impact of the transitional contract for supplies by British Coal to the electricity generators on the future of coal-fired power stations capacity in South Wales.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Coal Industry Ownership

9. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss future ownership of the industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of the British Coal Corporation regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Coal Imports

14. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the chairman of British Coal regarding the level of coal imports after 1 April 1993.

Mr. Wakeham: I have regular consultations with the chairman of British Coal on all aspects of the coal industry, including the remarkable efforts that the corporation has been making to improve its competitiveness and fight for a major share of the United Kingdom coal market over future years.

Offshore Oil Platforms

15. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the installation of emergency shut down valves on offshore oil platforms.

Mr. Moynihan: Of the 193 valves required to be fitted as a result of the Offshore Installations (Emergency Pipe-line Valve) Regulations 1989, 164 have now been fitted. In a further 13 cases, work is either in hand on the installation of the valves or the pipelines are shut down until the work can be performed. In 16 cases temporary exemptions have been granted until 31 March 1991 only, with stringent safety conditions attached, after which time these pipelines will also be shut down for the valves to be installed.

Privatisation

21. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of United Kingdom energy production was state owned (a) in 1979 and (b) since the privatisation of National Power and PowerGen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: In 1979 about 45 per cent. of United Kingdom production of primary fuels was by nationalised industries. It is estimated that the proportion now is about 32 per cent.

In terms of the proportion of final energy consumption in the United Kingdom supplied by nationalised industries, this represents a change from 59 per cent. in 1979 to about 8 per cent. now.

Loft Insulation

22. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the Government's estimate of the percentage of Britain's housing that does not have loft insulation up to the standard of 1990 building regulations.

Mr Heathcoat-Amory: The higher requirements for the thermal insulation of the roofs of dwellings in England and Wales, introduced in the 1990 building regulations, can effectively be met by 6 in. of loft insulation. Information currently available on levels of loft insulation in existing homes does not enable identification of specific levels of insulation over 4 in. in homes in England and Wales.

Landfill Gas

23. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many landfill gas schemes are currently in operation.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department is aware of 32 landfill gas schemes currently in operation.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to change the formula applied by OFFER for proposed price adjustments by the regional electricity companies to the domestic tariffs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 22 February at columns 280-81.

Oil Supplies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the effect of the Gulf war on oil supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait last year, and the cessation of its oil exports, other countries—mainly Saudia Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Venezuela—increased their production levels and made up the shortfall. Oil stocks have been at high levels throughout the period.

Offshore Supply Industry

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the share of the United Kingdom offshore supply industry in the world market for offshore work.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's best estimate is that the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry's share of the available market for offshore work was in excess of £6·5 billion in 1990 of which about a third—or approximately £2 billion—was exports.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average annual level of expenditure on energy efficiency between 1974 and 1979, 1980 and 1984 and between 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Average annual expenditure by my Department on energy efficiency programmes in the five years ended 1984-85 was £9·9 million and in the five years ended 1989-90 was £19·8 million. This compares with expenditure in 1979-80 of £2·4 million; previous expenditure is not separately identifiable.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the steps currently being taken to strengthen the arms control regimes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are a number of arms control fora: further measures to supplement the conventional armed forces in Europe (CFE) treaty and the Vienna package of confidence and security building measures (CSBMs) are under consideration in NATO and among the participants in the Vienna negotiations.

Negotiations continue between the United States and the Soviet Union on a START agreement which we hope can be concluded later this year.

NATO is currently considering its approach to negotiations on short-range nuclear forces in Europe.

An early and successful conclusion is being pursued in the conference on disarmament in Geneva for a chemical weapons convention.

The third review conference of the 1972 bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons convention in September will provide an opportunity to strengthen the convention by improving its confidence-building measures regime and reviewing the scope for verification.

Closer co-ordination is being sought in the Australia group on contacts on CW precursors and dual-use equipment.

Discussions continue in the United Nations, the co-ordinating committee for multilateral export control, the missile technology control regime and groups of nuclear suppliers on strengthening other arms control regimes.

Military Attaché, Baghdad

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what periods since 1979 the United Kingdom retained a military attaché at the British embassy in Baghdad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom had a succession of defence attachés at the British embassy at Baghdad from 1979 until the last incumbent departed on 27 September 1990.

Nuclear and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, (Mr. Kaufman) Official Report, 13 March, column 929, he will set out the specific loopholes and weaknesses in the agreements and control regimes for nuclear, chemical and biological weapons to which he makes reference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We work constantly to strengthen the control of all weapons of mass destruction through the co-ordinating committee for multilateral export controls, the missile technology control regime, groupings of nuclear suppliers and the Australia group. We are also working to achieve an effective global ban on chemical weapons through an international convention.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Ministers from his Department last visited Iraq, and what was the purpose and outcome of the visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office visited Iraq in February 1989 to discuss bilateral and commercial issues; to appeal for the release of Mr. Ian Richter; to encourage an early peace settlement with Iran; and to raise Iraq's use of chemical weapons and her human rights record. The policies of the Iraqi Government have prevented progress on any of these issues.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by Her Majesty's Government since 1985 to other permanent members of the United Nations Security Council in regard to their sales of military equipment and technology for Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy on sales of defence equipment to Iraq since 1984 was to refuse the sale of any equipment which would significantly enhance Iraq's ability to prolong or exacerbate its conflict with Iran. Since 1980 we had refused to allow the export of lethal equipment to either side. This policy was well known to the permanent members of the United Nations Security Council.

Israel

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed during his meeting with his Israeli counterpart in London on 5 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Discussions focused on regional security and the prospects for relaunching the Arab-Israel peace process following the ceasefire in the Gulf. There was also some discussion of bilateral issues.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to instruct the United Kingdom ambassador to the Board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency to seek to put on the agenda of the next IAEA governors' meeting the issues of (a) strengthening international nuclear safeguards and (b) the effects on the IAEA safeguards regime of the bombing of safeguarded nuclear facilities in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The director general of the IAEA raised a number of safeguards issues in his statement to the board of governors meeting in February.

The UK governor agreed that these were important matters to which the board would need to return at its next meeting.

Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the invitations his Department received to participate in or send an observer to conferences to be held in March.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Baltic States

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to his Soviet counterpart on the recommencement of the negotiations on self-determination for the Baltic states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the situation in the Baltic Republics with his Soviet counterpart, Mr Bessmertnykh and with President Gorbachev in Moscow on 21 March. In both meetings he stressed our belief that constructive negotiations between Moscow and the republican authorities should begin as soon as possible.

CFE Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implementation of the CFE treaty to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The signatory states have taken certain steps (data exchange and corrections, notification of inspectors' names, active inspection quotas and other details required by the inspection protocol) under those provisions of the CFE treaty which were provisionally applied from the time of signature. Further steps in the implementation of the treaty (including the destruction/conversion of excess equipment and the establishment of the verification regime) will take place after the treaty has entered into force, which happens only afterall 22 signatories have deposited instruments of ratification. To date, no signatory has done so.

Legislative Competence

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to produce a guide to hon. Members on the areas of competence of EC legislation and the United Kingdom Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The areas of Community competence are defined by the Community treaties, as interpreted by the ECJ. Through the European Communities Act 1972 and other legislation, Parliament has given the necessary effect to the United Kingdom's obligations under the treaties. In addition, scrutiny procedures enable Parliament to review thoroughly all proposals for Community legislation, and where appropriate to call for debates.

Missile Technology Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current information on the nations that are now members of missile technology control regime; and when they joined.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 1 February. Since then Austria has announced her adherence to the missile technology control regime.

Children

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek implementation of the articles of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child regarding children in conflict situations in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Iraq has not ratified or acceded to the United Nations convention on the rights of the child and is not therefore bound by its provisions. We remain deeply concerned about the general human rights situation in Iraq.

Sharks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Governments of the United States of America, Taiwan, Malaysia, China, Japan and Indonesia in respect of the slaughter of sharks for their fins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not intend to do so.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 167, what was the position of William Cowlins and Son with respect to the involvement of E. C. Harris in the proposed South Glamorgan TEC headquarters before 24 September 1990.

Mr. Jackson: I am not in a position to comment on any relationship that may have existed between William Cowlins and Son and E. C. Harris before 24 September 1990.

Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for the delay in updating the quarterly findings from the YT leavers survey; when he next plans to update the results of the survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Administrative systems used to collect information about YT leavers were changed last year. It has taken some time for the new systems to settle down. When I am satisfied that the YT follow-up system is producing good quality reliable data I will resume the release of results.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the move to delivery of training provision through TECs has had on the collection, processing and presentation of data from both the ET and YT leavers survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There has been no change to the system for collecting, processing and presenting ET follow-up information as a result of the move towards TEC delivery of programmes. The YT system has been changed to bring it into line with ET.

Training, Brixton

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library copies of the letters sent out in March 1991 by his training enterprise and education directorate inner London south area office to trainers in the Brixton area about funding levels for training in 1991-92; and if he will make it his policy to maintain current funding levels for training in the Brixton area.

Mr. Jackson: The letters sent to trainers in the Brixton area by the inner London south area office are confidential between the Department and the contractor and should not be publicised. It is not possible to give a guarantee that current funding levels in the Brixton area will be maintained.

Children's Rights

Miss Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the implementation of article 32 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lancsdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) on 21 March at columns 192-93. Article 32 of the convention seeks to regulate hours and conditions of employment and, under the convention's definition of a child, would apply to young people aged 16 to 18. We believe that terms and conditions of employment of young people, as of other employees, are matters for negotiation between employers and employees or their representatives. We have therefore made it clear that when we ratify the convention we will enter a reservation on this article.

PRIME MINISTER

Kashmir

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will urge the United Nations to implement its resolutions that the people of Kashmir should be given the right of self-determination.

The Prime Minister: United Nations resolutions on Kashmir over 40 years ago were concerned with the accession to India or Pakistan of the former princely state of Jammu and Kashmir. The Government consider that any proposal to resolve the continuing dispute over the status of Kashmir needs to take account of subsequent developments, and to be mutually agreed between the Governments of India and Pakistan.

President Gorbachev

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what matters were discussed at his meeting with President Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: The main subjects we discussed were the middle east, arms control, the Baltic states, the progress of political and economic reform in the Soviet Union and bilateral relations.

Kuwait

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if he will consult the United Kingdom Institute of Waste Management on the methods of reclamation of building rubble for the reconstruction of Kuwait.

The Prime Minister: The institute would be advised to register with the Department of Trade and Industry's Kuwait reconstruction database so that United Kingdom expertise in this field can be made available to the Kuwaiti authorities.

Nuclear and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 1094, to the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross), if he will list in the Official Report those forums and institutions at which he intends to take up the matter of the export of chemical, nuclear and biological weapons.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 6 March 1991.

Moscow

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister which organisations he met during his recent visit to Moscow.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to the Soviet Union I held meetings with President Gorbachev, Prime Minister Pavlov, Defence Minister Yazov and representatives of the armed forces, representatives of the Baltic states, and leading liberals.

Child benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister further to his oral answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 456, if he will make a further statement on the uprating of child benefit.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the uprating of child benefit announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on 19 March 1991.

Research and Development

Dr. Bray: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 472, what is the estimate of total Government expenditure on research and development in enterprises with fewer than 200 employees; and what proportion of it is estimated to be for defence purposes.

The Prime Minister: The 1989 survey of expenditure and employment on research and development (R and D) in United Kingdom industry was largely restricted to enterprises with 200 or more employees.

A provisional estimate for civil and defence research and development expenditure in enterprises with fewer than 200 employees has been made of £255 million. Details are given in the notes of the Central Statistical Office's "Business Bulletin" issue 14/91, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The nearest grouping for which firm data, disaggregated into civil and defence R and D, exists is that with 200 to 499 employees for which the proportion of expenditure for defence purposes is 2·4 per cent.

President Bush

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the matters discussed during his meeting with President Bush in Bermuda on 16 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 21 March at column 193.

Prime Minister, Tuvalu

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he met the Prime Minister of Tuvalu during his visit to London on 19 March.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what response he is making to the request for assistance in the establishment of a South Pacific disaster relief programme to respond to natural catastrophes, set out by the Prime Minister of Tuvalu.

The Prime Minister: This issue was not raised by the Prime Minister of Tuvalu when he saw the Minister for Overseas Development on 18 March. However, we are always ready to respond to the need for disaster relief assistance whether in the Pacific or elsewhere.

Gulf War

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has concerning the extent of damage to sewerage systems, water purification plants, hospitals and medical centres in (a) Iraq and (b) Kuwait arising from military action in the Gulf war; and what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to provide humanitarian aid to each country to alleviate hardship and disease caused by military action.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations Secretary-General reported to the Security Council on 21 March on Under Secretary-General Ahtisaari's findings following his mission to Iraq.

Ahtisaari reported that sewage systems, water purification plants, hospitals and medical centres are largely undamaged but are not functioning fully due to a lack of electricity and fuel. The United Nations sanctions committee is considering how to respond urgently.

Although Kuwait suffered widespread damage and sabotage to its infrastructure as a result of the Iraqi invasion and occupation, the Government of Kuwait have already started to organise repairs and have made arrangements to provide purified drinking water. Medical facilities were relatively undamaged and are continuing to operate.

The United Kingdom supports the work of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations relief agencies in Iraq and Kuwait. This year we have already given £2·5 million to the ICRC's Gulf appeal (the largest single cash donation) and US$1 million to the United Nations appeal co-ordinated by United Nations Disaster Relief Organisation. In addition, the EC Commission has given £8·75 million to support the relief activities in the Gulf region. The share of this attributable to the United Kingdom's aid budget is £1·75 million.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives have been taken by Her Majesty's Government's representatives to (a) the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, (b) the United Nations environment programme, (c) the International Atomic Energy Agency, (d) the International Energy Agency, (e) the World Health Organisation, (f) the International Labour Organisation, (g) the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, (h) the European Commission and (i) the United Nations, respectively, to alleviate hardship caused to civilians in Iraq and Kuwait caused by the Gulf war.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1991]: The International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations relief agencies are the main international organisations providing assistance to civilians in Iraq and Kuwait. A multi-agency UN mission has just returned from Iraq where it has assessed the needs of the civilian population and will shortly be visiting Kuwait. Representatives of British non-governmental organisations, Oxfam and Save the Children Fund, just back from Baghdad, are also planning relief activities. UNEP is helping to tackle the effects of oil pollution in the Gulf. The EC Commission has given £8·75 million to support relief activities in the Gulf region. The share of this attributable to the United Kingdom's aid budget is £1·75 million.

We are not aware that the other organisations mentioned are currently providing assistance to civilians in Iraq and Kuwait.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what communications he has had with the director of the World Health Organisation concerning disease and epidemics in Iraqi cities arising from destruction of sewage and water purification plants, and electricity generating stations, by allied bombing in the Gulf war.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1991]: We are in close touch with United Nations agencies including the World Health Organisation and the International Committee of the Red Cross about requirements for humanitarian assistance in Iraq.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 12 March, Official Report, column 472, he will make it his policy to make a one-off extra donation to the United Nations children's organisation, UNICEF, from the United Kingdom to help children in Iraq suffering as a result of the destruction of the economic infrastructure in Iraq from allied bombings.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1991]: A multi-agency United Nations mission has recently been in Iraq to assess humanitarian needs. It will make recommendations to the Secretary-General on emergency actions the United Nations might take. In the light of the mission's report we will consider what response to make to any appeal for funding launched by the Secretary-General, including what would be the most appropriate channel.

Middle East

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the United States Government on the prospective role of the Palestine Liberation Organisation in a peace settlement in the middle east.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1991]: We are in regular contact with the United States Administration on all aspects of the Arab/Israel dispute, including the position of the Palestine Liberation Organisation. The PLO has done little to enhance its role in recent months.

Iraq

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for 10 Downing street library a copy of the Simon Wiesenthal Foundation report on trade with Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1991]: No.

Food Chain

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a single department of state to supervise matters relating to the food chain from farm to plate.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 March 1991]: No. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food already performs this function, sharing responsibility for food safety with the Department of Health.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the annual change in living standards since 1979 of (a) non-pensioner couples with children, (b) non-pensioner couples without children, (c) non-pensioner single people, (d) non-pensioner single people with children, (e) single pensioners and (f) pensioner couples up to the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 26 July 1990 at columns 501-6.

Disability

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter on severely disabled children the hon. Member for Birkenhead sent to him on 19 November 1990.

Mr. Scott: I apologise for the delay in replying but we will do so as soon as possible.

Social Fund Loans

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards allowing local offices to recycle social fund loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Loan recoveries are returned to the national budget and any recycling of the money is made centrally. This enables us to focus the additional funds on those offices whose budgets are under most pressure. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Local Offices

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving income support in the areas covered by the Poplar, Stepney and Shoreditch Department of Social Security offices, respectively; and how many people in Tower Hamlets as a whole are receiving income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Information for the London borough of Tower Hamlets is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information in respect of the Department of Social Security local offices is as follows:

Total income support claimants

Department of Social Security office	Number
Poplar	13,829
Stepney	9,486
Shoreditch	10,025

Note:

Data derived from 28 February 1991 count of cases in action, which include a number of cases where payment has ceased but other action is continuing. Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving income support in the areas covered by the Poplar DSS office.

Miss Widdecombe: The total number of people receiving income support in the area covered by the Poplar DSS office is 13,829. Information in respect of areas within the local office boundary is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Note: Data derived from 28 February 1991 count of cases in action, which include a number of cases where payment has ceased but other action is continuing. Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Over-60s Card

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made in discussions on the European Community over-60s card.

Mr. Jack: The United Kingdom welcomes the proposal for an over-60s card and has responded positively to the idea. However, we, like other EC member states, are not yet in a position to reply finally to the Commission about implementation. Departmental officials are having further discussions with their European counterparts to seek to resolve various problems associated with the introduction of such a card.

I recently wrote to Members of the European Parliament about this matter and I will send the hon. Member a copy of the letter.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish the study of the standards of examining medical practitioners for attendance allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We plan to publish the report in the summer.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what monitoring his Department has undertaken of the operation of guidelines for visiting doctors introduced last April to allow disabled children under two years of age to qualify for attendance allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Guidance was issued by the attendance allowance board to its delegated doctors on those factors which should be taken into account when deciding whether the medical conditions for an award are met in children with disabilities who are aged less than two years and for whom a claim has been made for attendance allowance. At the same time, the board also advised visiting doctors (examining medical practitioners) on the special needs of disabled infants which should be reflected in the reports of medical examinations. The examining doctors are routinely monitored by the Department's regional senior medical officers. We are not aware that any particular problems have emerged during the process of such monitoring following the extension of attendance allowance to children aged less than two years.

Lone Parents

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish the research study on lone parents conducted for his Department by Professor Bradshaw and Dr. Millar, which is referred to in the White Paper, "Children Come First".

Mr. Jack: The Department has now received the final report of the research study. It is expected it will be published by HMSO by the summer.

Income Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was, on the same basis as the tax/benefit tables (i) the total income support of an employed married man with children aged four and six, in December 1990, whose income was (a) £70 per week, (b) £120 per week and (c) £140 per week, and (ii) the total income support of an employed married man with children aged three, eight and eleven, in December 1990, whose income was (a) £70 per week, (b) £120 per week and (c) £140 per week.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is contained in the tax/benefit model tables, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Low Wages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families rely on means-tested benefits to top up low wages.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 March 1991]: The table sets out the latest available information on the number of families in receipt of income-related benefits who were also in receipt of income from employment (either part time or full time). There is no agreed definition of what constitutes "low wages", and as indicated in the published DSS tax/benefit model tables, entitlement to income-related benefits can extend some considerable distance up the income scales depending on family circumstances and composition. The contribution made by income-related benefit to overall household income will similarly vary between families—clearly, some of the families listed will be entitled to larger amounts, whereas for others the benefit may form only a very small proportion of overall household income. Figures for income support and housing benefit are derived from the 1989 annual statistical inquiry and show the position at May 1989. The figure for family credit is an estimate of case load as at July 1990.

	Number
Income support	112,000
Housing benefit[1]	150,000
Family credit	325,820

[1] The total includes those in receipt of rent rebate, rent allowance and or rate rebate in England and Wales and recipients of rent rebate/allowance and community charge rebate in Scotland. This therefore excludes cases in Scotland who were in receipt of community charge rebate only.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Schoolchildren (Part-time Work)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated number of children of compulsory school age who work part-time; and if he will make a statement on the survey recently carried out by the North-Eastern education and library board on pupils working part-time.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available. It would be premature to comment on the survey undertaken by the North-Eastern education and library board until that board has completed its own consideration of the matter and submitted its views to the Department of Education.

Gas Pipelines

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek estimates for the provision of a gas pipeline from Morecambe bay or elsewhere to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The proposal being considered is for a pipeline between Scotland and Northern Ireland and estimates of the capital costs of the pipeline will form part of the economic assessment of the project.

Second-hand Cars

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many second-hand cars have been imported into Northern Ireland and how many exported in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and in each year how many came from and were sent to (a) Great Britain and (b) the Irish Republic.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland holds statistical information on the total number of vehicles removed from the vehicle register as a result of having been permanently exported or scrapped but does not have separate figures on the number of exported vehicles. The information set out in the table relates to used vehicles registered for the first time in Northern Ireland having previously been used in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland.

Origin	1988	1989	1990
Great Britain	9,255	11,077	16,675

Dumping

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to increase efforts to ensure (a) that the environment is protected from illegal dumping and (b) that existing sites where dumping has occurred are cleared.

Mr. Needham: In Northern Ireland district councils are responsible for controlling the disposal of waste, including illegal dumping and the clearance of sites. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is currently reviewing the problem of illegal dumping, in light of provisions introduced in the rest of the United Kingdom by the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals, companies, or organisations have been prosecuted for unlawful dumping in each district council area, in each of the past seven years; and in how many cases prosecutions were successful.

Mr. Needham: In Northern Ireland, each district council is responsible for enforcing in its area the legislation on the disposal of waste. Records of prosecutions are not held centrally. However, the information which the hon. Gentleman requires will be sought from the various councils and I shall write to him as soon as possible.

Agriculture

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of workers engaged in agriculture in Northern Ireland in 1980, 1985 and 1990 (a) in total and (b) whole time.

Mr. Hanley: Investment by the agricultural industry in Northern Ireland in plant and machinery, vehicles and buildings and works in 1979, 1980, 1985, and 1990 is given in the table (i) in current prices and (ii) in constant (1985) prices. WALES

Children Act

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what element was included in his revenue support grant to cover statutory provisions relating to the Children Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: Revenue support grant is paid in support of expenditure on services generally and is not earmarked for particular services. In setting the level of total standard spending for Wales for 1991-92 account was taken of the local authority associations' view that the introduction of measures under the Children Act 1989 would cost £1·5 million in that financial year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the standard spending assessment for (a) education and (b) social services, for each local authority in Wales in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh revenue support grant formulae do not form a basis for calculating standard spending assessments for individual services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the relative rates of increase in Wales of (a) council spending, (b) inflation and (c) the uniform business rate and locally determined rate poundage, over the preceding 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: Information available is shown in the following table:

Percentage change on year earlier

	Revenue spending[1]	Retail prices index[2]	Average general rate poundage
1981-82	N/A	11·4	14·2
1982-83	5·8	7·3	3·1
1983-84	5·0	5·1	0·7
1984-85	2·9	4·7	8·1

[1] Revenue expenditure net of specific Government grants, sales, fees and charges. Because definitional changes in 1990-91, the percentage change shown for that year is on a slightly different basis to those shown for the earlier years.

[2] Using September of each year as the reference point.

[3] Provisional.

[4] Due to the change to the uniform business rate in 1990-91, no comparison with the preceding year is available.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether specific grants were ring-fenced for social service expenditure in the settlement for 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: The following specific grants in respect of the Government's social services training support programme for local authority social services staff in Wales were included in the Welsh revenue support grant settlement for 1991-92:

	£ (000s)
Child care	453
Children Act 1989	240
Community care	465
Post qualifying level training for staff in management and training posts	300
	1,458

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the basis per adult for redistribution of the uniform business rate to local councils in Wales for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: Non-domestic rates income is distributed to local authorities in accordance with the Distribution of Non-Domestic Rates (Relevant Population) Report for Wales and paragraphs 12 and 13 of schedule 8 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

The figures per head of relevant population are as follows:

	Districts £	Counties £
1990-91	32	171
1991-92	40	200

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what share of the total uniform business rate is being paid by (a) factories and (b) warehouses in Wales; and what were their relevant shares before the introduction of the uniform business rate.

Mr. David Hunt: The relevant shares of the total uniform business rate being paid by (a) factories and (b) warehouses in Wales and their relevant shares before the introduction of the uniform business rate are shown in the following table:

	Percentage share of total non-domestic rates
	1989-90	1990-91 before transition	1990-91 after transition
(a) Factories	26	19	26
(b) Warehouses	6	5	6

Community Charge

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that employees who are required, for short periods of the year, to live in at their place of work are not required to pay community charge in respect of both their permanent abode and their temporary residence at their place of work.

Mr. David Hunt: Following our initial review of the community charge last year and associated consultation on the document entitled "The Standard Community Charge and Other Matters", a number of changes to the structure of the standard charge were brought into force by means of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) (Amendment) (No. 3) Regulations 1990 (S.I. 1990/2475). Among the new prescribed classes that will apply from 1 April 1991 is a class of unoccupied property (class M), with a maximum standard charge multiplier of 0·5 where the person subject to the standard community charge occupies another property which is job-related. In addition, local authorities already possess considerable discretion to specify their own standard community charge classes, and they may do so by reference to a number of factors, including the circumstances—other than financial circumstances—of persons subject to a standard charge.

Damage to Highways

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he is now giving to local highway authorities in Wales with regard to the payment for damage done to highways in Wales by the fracturing of water mains and the consequential costs of repairs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 contains provisions on the liability of water authorities and other undertakers to highway authorities for damage caused to the property of the highway authority. However, the current provisions have led to a number of disputes over the apportionment of costs of repairing roads following the fracturing of water mains. The New Roads and Street Works Bill now before Parliament would replace the 1950 Act provisions with a straightforward duty on undertakers to compensate the highway authority in respect of any damage or loss suffered by the authority as a result of the execution of street works or an event such as burst main.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to sell off investments currently held by the Welsh Development Agency in Welsh companies.

Mr. David Hunt: Under guidelines issued by my Department, the Welsh Development Agency seeks to dispose of shares at the earliest practicable time consistent with its statutory purposes.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total estimated value of investments currently held by the Welsh Development Agency in Welsh companies.

Mr. David Hunt: Latest available estimate of the gross value of the Welsh Development Agency's equity investment portfolio is £8 million.

Development Assistance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has taken steps with the European Commission to press for an extension to the programme timetable for the Dyfed-Gwynedd-Powys national programme of Community interest for a further two years; and if he will make a statement on the expenditure pattern of the programme to date.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Commission has already agreed funds to enable the Dyfed Gwynedd Powys programme to continue until the end of 1993. Out of a total ERDF commitment of £79·4 million for 1987 to 1991, £51·2 million has already been committed and I anticipate that the remaining funds available for allocation in 1991 will be taken up.

Salmon and Sea Trout

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the most up-to-date estimate of the number of (a) salmon and (b) sea trout making spawning runs in the waters and Rivers (i) Taff and (ii) Ely or their estuarial waters for each year since 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: There are no means of recording the number of salmon and sea trout entering to spawn on the rivers Taff and Ely or their esturial waters. However, records are kept by the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority of the number of these fish reported by anglers, captured by the NRA, or found dead. These records provide minimum estimates of the runs of salmon and sea trout into the two rivers, and are as follows:

	Salmon	Sea Trout
River Taff
1987	58	409
1988	124	322
1989	37	101
[1]1990	163	141

No salmon or sea trout recorded prior to 1989
1989	13	23

M4

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the dates on which the two motorway signs on the westbound carriageway of the M4 motorway at junction 48 were damaged; and by when he proposes to have them repaired.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Superficial damage occurred during the storms of Janaury 1990, but the more substantial damage occurred in February 1991. Both signs will be repaired by mid-April.

Elderly People

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the Government's current policy towards the elderly in Wales; if he will comment on funding arrangements of organisations connected with the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Our aim is to ensure that, wherever possible, elderly people are able to live with comfort and dignity in their own homes and communities. To secure this we have a wide range of co-ordinated policies and initiatives covering personal social services, health, housing and other matters. Organisations connected with the elderly benefit from a wide range of funds made available by the Department for a number of purposes. In addition to the general financial support provided to statutory authorities, we have just announced, for instance, special grants in 1991-92 totalling more than £750,000 to promote more flexible forms of community care for elderly people provided by a wide range of statutory and voluntary bodies. We shall also continue to contribute to the funding of 56 projects that are under-way throughout Wales under the Elderly Initiative at a planned cost of £2·3 million in 1991-92. We expect shortly to announce the allocation of resources in 1991-92 to voluntary bodies in this field operating at the all-Wales level.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is shown in the following table:

	Hectares under
At June	Cereals	Potatoes
1990	56,016	4,329
1989	61,621	4,241

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of investment by the agricultural industry in (a) plant and machinery, (b) vehicles, (c) buildings and (d) works in Wales, in 1979, 1980, 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available (i) in cash terms (ii) at fixed prices.

History and Geography

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to lay before the House the statutory orders in relation to history and geography in the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today laid before the House the statutory orders with associated documents setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for history and geography in the national curriculum for pupils from age five to 16 in schools in Wales. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions took place between his Department and the United States Department of Defense concening the decision to attack the withdrawing Iraqi forces at the Al-Muttla gap;

(2) what opportunities to surrender were offered to the withdrawing Iraqi forces on the road to Basra while they were in transit;

(3) what discussions took place between the Allied military commanders in the Gulf and the Kuwaiti Government in exile concerning the decision to bomb the withdrawing Iraqi forces at the Al-Muttla gap;

(4) whether he has any information as to whether there were any Kuwaiti captives travelling down the Basra road in the columns of withdrawing Iraqi forces that were subject to Allied air attack in the final days of the Gulf conflict; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what were the nationalities of the Allied aircraft involved in the bombing of withdrawing Iraqi forces at the Al-Muttla gap; and what role RAF planes played in this;

(6) what is his Department's assessment of the number of Iraqi vehicles destroyed at the Al-Muttla gap; and how many of these were specifically military vehicles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Allied attacks during the night of 26-27 February on Iraqi units moving north with their equipment ahead of the allied advance on Kuwait city were part of the military operation to liberate Kuwait and to restore the legitimate Government, and were directed by coalition commanders in the same way as other military actions during the campaign. Fighting was in progress throughout the theatre and it was allied policy to attack Iraqi units which could continue to pose a threat. RAF aircraft were not involved in the attacks between Kuwait city and the Matla ridge as this was outside the area of operations of British forces, and I am therefore not able to comment in detail on the attacks. We have no precise information on the number of vehicles destroyed, although many were military, including a large number of tanks. Civilian vehicles were also being used by the Iraqi military. We have no information on whether any Kuwaiti detainees were in the vehicles. Any civilian casualties are greatly regretted but responsibility for the deaths of any Kuwaitis being taken to Iraq against their will lies with Saddam Hussein.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the means by which Kuwaiti captives were returned to Iraq during the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not know how and when Kuwaiti detainees were moved to Iraq.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department was aware of the locations of Kuwaiti captives held in Iraq between 2 August 1990 and the cessation of hostilities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review his Department has made of the safety of the existing designs and designs currently under development of nuclear warheads; what application of three-dimensional modelling has been used; and what reconsideration has resulted of the safety case for an actual nuclear explosion which might be accidentally or unintentionally initiated leading to the dispersal of radioactivity and/or a nuclear yield.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All of the United Kingdom's nuclear warheads are designed to meet stringent safety requirements. Before entering operational service, the designs are subject to a comprehensive series of trials and assessments, encompassing normal and credible abnormal environments of in-service life, and to formal safety approvals procedures, which are assessed independently. In addition, the United Kingdom conducts a continuous safety review of all operationally deployed designs by way of routine examination and sophisticated modelling.

Radiofrequency Radiation Weapons

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the British Army has any radiofrequency radiation weapon capability.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British Army keeps abreast of developments in the military use of the electro-magnetic spectrum.

Housing

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties, owned and administered by his Department, have stood vacant (a) for over six months or (b) for over one year; and what is the regional distribution of these properties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not maintained in the precise form requested. As at 31 December 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, 8,227 service married quarters in the United Kingdom had been vacant for under one year and 2,365 for one year and over. In addition, 75 Ministry of Defence civilian houses and flats in the United Kingdom had been vacant for under six months and 93 for six months and over. The regional breakdown is as follows:

Region	Married quarters vacant		MOD civilian houses vacant
	Under one year	Over one year	Under six months	Over six months
Northern	67	12	1	2
Yorkshire	573	177	—	—
East Midlands	390	430	—	—
East Anglia	488	132	—	—
South East	3,121	795	29	17
South West	1,409	154	12	23
West Midlands	278	63	—	—
North West	134	—	—	—
Wales	347	71	2	5
Scotland	910	423	31	46
Northern Ireland	510	108	—	—
TOTAL	8,227	2,365	75	93

Many of these properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal. A total of 1,701 of the dwellings were already in the process of being sold.

Research and Development

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department obliges defence contractors to declare to him the nature and value of any sub-contracts for research and development that they place with other companies.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On major contracts the Ministry of Defence requires the presentation of "make or buy" plans detailing each work package valued at £50,000 or more. These indicate whether work is intended to be carried out in-house or to be sub-contracted. In addition, contractors are required to notify the Ministry in advance of any sub-contract which they intend to place which includes design or development work. In appropriate cases the Ministry will then enter into a design rights agreement direct with the sub-contractor concerned.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department is making in its work with the Central Statistical Office in relation to the interpretation of Frascati definitions as they apply to defence research and development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Statisticians in MOD and CSO have had a number of preliminary discussions about the interpretation of Frascati definitions as they apply to defence R and D and will shortly be commencing consultation with representatives of industry.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average percentage profit element included in research and development contracts placed by his Department in private industry.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the case of a contract awarded by competition the element included in the price in respect of profit is a mater for the commercial judgment of the tenderer.

In respect of non-competitive contracts the Government profit formula does not draw any distinction between research and development contracts and other types of contract. For the average contractor the target rates of return on cost, on the basis of historic cost accounting, are:

	Per cent.
Risk contracts (for example, those priced on the basis of forward estimates of cost)	11·08
Non-risk contracts (for example, cost plus percentage fee)	8·52

In the case of risk contracts the profit which the contractor actually earns will depend on the efficiency with which he performs the contract.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the amount of his Department's research and development expenditure in private industry which is further sub-contracted to other companies.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is no departmental requirement to hold such information and disproportionate cost would be incurred in seeking to prepare an estimate.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Endurance was built; what is her expected future life in service; and what steps are being taken to design a replacement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Endurance was completed as the MV Anita Dan in 1956. She was subsequently purchased by the Ministry of Defence and converted to an ice patrol ship in 1967-68. HMS Endurance is capable of operating until the mid-1990s. The requirement for a replacement is being studied.

Medication

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will examine the contracts of service men and women in respect of the provision of non-prescribed medication;

(2) if he will consider changing the system whereby service men and women are expected to pay for non-prescribed medication.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The conditions of service for the armed forces allow non-prescribed medication issued to service personnel through military facilities to be provided free of charge. There are no plans to change this system.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what countries were represented at the 1990 British Army equipment exhibition and at the previous exhibition.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 28 March 1990 at column 237.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nationals held as prisoners of war were (a) released following hearings before an Army board of inquiry and (b) released on 6 March 1991 following the cessation of hostilities in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Three Iraqi nationals held as prisoners of war were released from Rollestone camp following hearings before Army boards of inquiry; the remaining 32 were released on 6 March.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy cows there were in England and the European Community, respectively (a) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (b) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is in the table:

Sharks

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what shark products have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Curry: The volumes and values of imports of products of dogfish and other sharks are given in the table. Information on fresh fillets, minced fish, livers and roes and other products are not readily available.

EC Surplus Food

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when decisions will be made on the designation of applicant organisations under the EC surplus food scheme; and whether groups of parish councils will be eligible for appointment.

Mr. Curry: The closing date for applications under the EC surplus food scheme was 22 March. All applications received by then are currently being considered and an announcement will be made as soon as possible. Applicant parish councils meeting the requirements of the scheme will be designated.

Cereals

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of cereals are grown in England and the European Community, respectively (a) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (b) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table. The figures for the European Community are all for the Community as at present constituted minus the former German Democratic Republic, which joined after the 1990 cereals harvest.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of potatoes were grown in England and the European Community, respectively, (a) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (b) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: Following are the figures:

	England	EC-12
1986	130,400	1,476,400
1987	131,000	1,463,100

Agricultural Workers

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of workers engaged in agriculture in England and the European Community, respectively in 1980, 1985 and 1990, (a) in total and (b) whole time.

Mr. Curry: The information requested for England is provided in the table. For the European Community farm structure surveys recorded the total number of family and regularly employed non-family workers in the EC10 as follows (millions): 1983, 6·9; 1985, 6·7 and 1987, 6·2; the corresponding figure for EC12 in 1987 was 8·8 million. No reliable analysis of this series distinguishing between full and part-time workers has yet been published, but some details are contained in the Eurostat publication, "Farm Structure, 1987 Survey: main results", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Agriculture Industry (Investment)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the level of investment by the agriculture industry in (a) plant and machinery, (b) vehicles, (c) buildings and (d) works in England in 1979, 1980, 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available (i) in cash terms and (ii) at fixed prices.

Mr. Curry: Estimates of the level of new investment for each of the years requested is shown in the table for the categories of investment for which figures are available.

Breeding Sows and Gilts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many breeding sows and gilts there were in England and the European Community, respectively (a) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (b) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: Figures requested are as follows:

Ewes and Shearlings

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ewes and shearlings there were in England and the European Community, respectively (a) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (b) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Mr. Curry: Ewe and shearling numbers in England and the European Community are as follows:

Year	England	European Community
1979-81	6,380	n.a.
1986	8,306	60,914
1987	8,905	65,536

Bananas

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 13 March, Official report, column 567, what percentage of the fruit referred to relates to plantains and what percentage to bananas.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom trade statistics do not differentiate between banana and plantain imports.

Farm Capital Grant Schemes

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to consult interested bodies on changes to the farm capital grant schemes.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have today issued a consultation paper proposing the merger of the farm diversification grant scheme and the farm and conservation grant scheme. Copies are available in the Library of the House. As a result of the merger, the maximum investment on which grant would be claimable for diversification projects would be increased to £40,000 from £35,000 and under the farm and conservation grant scheme, to £85,000 from £74,000. However, the combined investment ceiling under both would not be allowed to exceed £85,000.

In reviewing the scheme I have decided to ask Parliament to abolish the rule that work started without formal acknowledgement of prior notification may not qualify for grant under the farm and conservation grant scheme. A number of farmers who have been penalised for ignoring this rule in their eagerness to deal with pollution problems will now be able to submit fresh claims as soon as the new rules are in force. However, the rule will not be abolished until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation and will remain in force for work carried out under an improvement plan. Farmers are therefore advised to consult the appropriate agriculture department if they are in any doubt as to their eligibility for grant.

Tractors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tractors were acquired by the agriculture industry (a) in total and (b) of 40 kW and over, in England, in 1979, 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: The information is not available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Nationalised Industries

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report, the total contribution by or to the Exchequer to or from each of the then nationalised industries for each year since 1973.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in exactly the form requested. Data on central Government subsidies and capital grants to nationalised industries since 1978-79 and on net lending to nationalised industries since 1984-85 are set out in the tables. The tables are consistent with the analyses set out out in the nationalised industries section of the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement (Cm 1520). Corresponding data for earlier years are not readily available.

Building Societies

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what monitoring is being undertaken of the commercial lending exposure of building societies under the Building Societies Act 1986.

Mr. Maples: The Building Societies Commission collects systematic information from building societies and this includes what are known as class 2 assets, which cannot exceed 20 per cent. of all lending. Class 2 covers all mortgage lending except that secured on owner-occupied residential property.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all official documents that are available as guidance for civil service managers considering competitive tendering and contracting out, including guidance on how to compare in-house costs with contractors' bids.

Mr. Mellor: A list of all documents on guidance associated with competitive tendering and contracting out is not held centrally. Detailed guidance on the various aspects of competitive tendering and contracting out, including in-house costs, is contained in CUP guidance

No. 2, issued by the Central Unit on Purchasing (Her Majesty's Treasury). But Departments have the option of enhancing this guidance by issuing their own material. Departments also have access to "Fees and Charges: A Guide for Government Departments" and "Investment Appraisal in the Public Sector: A technical guide for Government Departments", both documents issued by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Taxpayers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers reside within Derwentside district; and what proportion they are of the post-18 years population;

(2) how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers reside within Wear Valley district; and what proportion they are of the post-18 years population.

Mr. Maude: I regret that estimates of numbers of taxpayers are not available at district level.

Visible Trade Deficit

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the visible trade deficits for each quarter of 1990; and what effect he expects recent reductions in interest rates to have on the United Kingdom balance of trade during the current year.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 March 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Visible trade balance

1990
Quarter 1	−5·9
Quarter 2	−5·3
Quarter 3	−3·7
Quarter 4	−3·0
Total	−17·9

The FSBR forecast is for the visible deficit to fall further this year, to £12 billion.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date, at present rates of toll, payment for the Severn bridge will be completed; what that date would be if tolls increased each year at 3 per cent.; and what the annual income would be estimated to be in the final year (a) at present toll rates and (b) at 3 per cent. compound increases in toll rates.

Mr. Chope: At present rates of toll it is estimated, making a range of assumptions about future traffic growth and inflation, that the debt of the Severn bridge could be paid off between the years 2008 and 2016 with income in the final year of between £27 million and £29 million. An assumed 3 per cent. per annum increase in tolls would be entirely hypothetical.

London Underground (Overcrowding)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the London Transport report on overcrowding on underground trains.

Mr. Freeman: I have no knowledge of a London Transport report on overcrowding on underground trains. If the hon. Lady is referring to the report on congestion at stations, which was undertaken by independent consultants in 1989, she should address her request to London Transport.

Road Lighting

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will identify any environmental considerations which prevent the lighting of the Swanley-Sevenoaks section of the M25.

Mr. Chope: The decision whether to light the section of M25 motorway between Swanley and Sevenoaks will be based on a comprehensive appraisal of all relevant factors, including a full assessment of the environmental impacts. These will include the appearance of lighting by day and by night and its impact on the quality of the environment in the vicinity. The road safety and economic cost/benefit assessments will also be included.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to light the unlit section of the M4 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We have no plans at present to light unlit sections of the M4. The provision of additional lighting will be considered in conjunction with current planning for widening the M4.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for the M4 motorway in Wales.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has plans to light the unlit sections of the M40 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: It is planned to light the M40 motorway between junctions 4 and 5 by the end of 1991. The provision of additional lighting will be considered in conjunction with planning for widening the M40, at present in hand.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will monitor the volume of traffic on the Swanley-Sevenoaks section of the M25 motorway with a view to installing lighting to improve safety.

Mr. Chope: The traffic volume and night-time accident records are already monitored on the Swanley to Sevenoaks section of M25 motorway so that the case for the installation of lighting can be properly assessed.

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the effect of lighting of roads on night-time accidents; and what is his policy on the accident prevention value of lighting of roads.

Mr. Chope: Research in this country and elsewhere has shown that the average reduction in night-time accidents attributable to road lighting is about 30 per cent. There is, however, substantial variation between locations, depending on the type of road and other features. The figure of 30 per cent. is used by the Department for economic assessment of proposed road lighting schemes for motorways and trunk roads.

Traffic Calming

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to extend traffic-calming measures; what are his Department's spending plans for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 for such measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department is actively promoting a number of traffic-calming measures including road humps and 20 mph zones. The responsibility for funding and installing these measures is primarily for local highway authorities. We shall continue to provide advice, guidance and research back-up.

M62

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 195, what were the reasons for rejection of the alternative solutions to the problems of congestion on the M62 motorway.

Mr. Chope: Widening of the existing motorway is only an interim measure as it will not increase capacity sufficiently to meet projections in traffic growth. Limiting access to the motorway for local traffic would severely increase congestion on local roads. Although public transport—including rail—makes an important contribution it cannot fulfil the needs of more than a small proportion of private and business road users.

MV Breydon (Explosives)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) on 5 March, Official Report, column 90, what was the ultimate destination of the cargo of explosives carried on MV Breydon; whether there are regular shipments of explosives and ammunition to the Army through Drogheda port; and when the marine accident investigation branch investigation will be completed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The greater part of the cargo was consigned to two commercial concerns, dealing in industrial explosives, in Dublin. The rest was for the Irish Ministry of Defence. The ultimate destination of the consignments is not known; there are regular shipments of explosives through Drogheda. On occasions these include consignments for the Irish Ministry of Defence, and the marine accident investigation branch expects to complete its investigation next month.

Dock Labour Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in relation to the dock labour scheme, he will list, by individual port, (a) the estimated number of registered dockers who were expected to leave the industry, given also as a percentatge of the total of registered dockers, (b) the estimated contribution from the Government to the redundancy compensation scheme, (c) the actual number of registered dockers who have left the industry to date, given also as a percentage of the total of registered dockers and (d) the actual contribution from the Government to the redundancy compensation scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government made no estimate before the compensation scheme was introduced either of the likely number of registered dock workers who would be made redundant or of the Government's contribution to their compensation on a port-by-port basis. The number of former registered dock workers at each scheme port who had been made redundant or had been given notice of redundancy by 22 March 1991, and the Government's contribution towards their compensation, are in the table:

Highway Maintenance

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional resources, other than those transferred from revenue budgets, he intends to make available for highway structural maintenance on the primary route network.

Mr. Chope: We intend to provide £100 million a year from 1992-93 by way of transport supplementary grant and credit approvals for structural maintenance on the primary route network. The control total for the highways maintenance standard spending assessment for 1992-93 has yet to be decided.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with local authorities about increasing investment in highway structural maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I met representatives of the local authority associations on 18 February. Officials have also had meetings with the associations, most recently on 22 March.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received in favour of his plans to reclassify expenditure on highway structural maintenance on the primary route network as capital expenditure;

(2) what representations he has had from local authority associations on his decision to reclassify expenditure on highway structural maintenance on the primary route network as capital expenditure.

Mr. Chope: Expenditure by local authorities on structural maintenance of roads is expenditure for capital purposes within the meaning of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and, under section 42 of that Act, does not need to be charged to revenue account if credit approvals are used as authority to capitalise it or it is reimbursed out of transport supplementary grant. The local authority associations have criticised our plans to make grant and credit approvals available towards such expenditure. No other representations have been received.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the criteria will be for assessing competing bids for transport supplementary grant for highway structural maintenance on the primary route network.

Mr. Chope: The criteria will take into account the length and structural condition of the roads concerned.

Air Fares

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the percentage increase in air fares likely to arise on routes between the United Kingdom and other European Community countries as a result of higher airport charges and lower income for airlines if the current duty free allowances are withdrawn from such services.

Mr. McLoughlin: The EC has yet to make a decision on whether or not to abolish duty free allowances after 1992. If they were to be abolished, there would be an effect on the income of airport operators and airlines. The time scale of any abolition, the competitive conditions in the market and the commercial response of airport operators and airlines are among the variables which make it impossible to give accurate estimates of any possible effect on air fares.

M27 (Noise Pollution)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will order a survey of noise pollution caused by traffic on the bridge on the M27 over the River Hamble and undertake appropriate noise reduction measures.

Mr. Chope: No; when the secton of the M27 which includes the Hamble bridge was built in the 1970s, all the eligible properties were offered noise insulation in accordance with the provisions of the Land Compensation Act 1973 and the related Noise Insulation Regulations. Part I of the 1973 Act also enabled eligible residents subsequently to claim compensation for depreciation in value of their property due to physical factors, including noise, attributable to the motorway.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by Eurotunnel in meeting its obligations under section 19(3) of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that these obligations are fully met by 15 June 1993.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that Eurotunnel is working on plans for the carriage of pedal bicycles and motorcycles through the channel tunnel. Its plans will be subject to operating rules which require the approval of the intergovernmental commission in accordance with clause 13 of the concession agreement.

MV Derbyshire

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of apparent new material relating to the loss of the Derbyshire, if he will reopen the formal investigation into the loss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The material, which included a paper written by the late Professor Bishop and his colleagues and an underwater film of the Kowloon Bridge, has been examined by the marine accident investigation branch. I have now received the chief inspector's conclusion. He advises, and I have accepted his advice, that the material does not warrant the reopening of the court of formal investigation into the loss of the Derbyshire. The chief inspector has set out his conclusions and the reasons for them in a letter to me, and I am placing a copy in the Library.

I do appreciate the concerns expressed in some quarters about bulk carrier safety. There is currently work going on at the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) on this topic. The Department of Transport is making a contribution to that work, particularly in the area of investigation into cargo liquefaction. The attention of the International Maritime Organisation will also be drawn to the theories of Professor Bishop and his team.

Driving Licence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to make further changes to the Great Britain driving licence.

Mr. Chope: We have considered this very carefully. We have concluded that there would be considerable benefits in including photographs on driving licences. Technological developments will make the inclusion of photographs on driving licences feasible in a few years at a modest additional cost. Accordingly, we are issuing a consultation document inviting views on the proposals today.

Motorway Distance Limits

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what were the factors that caused him to extend the distance limit for safeguarding purposes beyond 67m from the centre line of the motorway in the case of the two-mile section of the M6 between junction 4 of the M6 and its junction with the M1;

(2) what were the factors that caused him to extend the distance limit for safeguarding purposes beyond 67m from the centre line of the motorway in the case of the 80-mile section of the M1 between junctions 6A and 33.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 March 1991]: In the particular local circumstances where the existing external boundary of the motorway land is more than 67m from the centre line due to the hilly terrain with the inevitable wide embankments and cuttings, and in view of the uncertainty as to how the widening would be carried out, the Department concluded that it needed to be aware of development proposals affecting land within 30m of that boundary.

East Norton Bypass

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to reply to correspondence from Mr. Robert Curnock of Hallaton road, East Norton, Leicestershire and Mr. Edwin de Lisle of Great Easton, Market Harborough, Leicestershire relating to the A47 East Norton bypass, details of which have been sent to his Department.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 March 1991]: An acknowledgement letter was sent to Mr. de Lisle on 1 March. We hope to be able to send a full reply to Mr. de Lisle and Mr. Curnock before the end of March.

M6 (Thornbridge Viaduct)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long work is expected to continue on the Thornbridge viaduct of the M6 motorway; what are the reasons for continuing work; and if he has made any arrangements for his contractors to consult and inform nearby local residents regarding the disturbance from the works.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 March 1991]: Work currently under way for the installation of cathodic protection systems on the viaduct substructure between Beeches road and Thornbridge avenue should be finished by May 1991. A further similar contract south of Thornbridge avenue is expected to start in April 1991 and will last approximately 11 months.

The work is part of the strategy for maintaining the midland links viaducts. In the interests of local residents, work on these contracts is limited to daytime hours.

HEALTH

Fluoridation

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public funding is used to promote fluoridation; and if he will publish a statement detailing the nature and extent of that funding over the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Regional health authorities are generally responsible for local schemes for water fluoridation. Information on the total cost of these schemes is not available. Some financial assistance is, however, provided from central funds. This amounted to:

1987-88	433,000
1988-89	1,168,000
1989-90	430,000
1990-91	257,784

In addition a grant under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 has been made each year to the British Fluoridation Society as follows:

1986-87	20,000
1987-88	20,000
1988-89	30,000
1989-90	30,000
1990-91	33,000

GP Budgets

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards there are for general practitioners who submit claims for cash-limited budgets in good time where the FHSAs are unable to process payments before the end of the financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Reimbursements from family health services authorities (FHSAs) cash limited budgets for practice staff and premises improvements are made quarterly in arrears although advances equal to an estimated 30 per cent. of the total due are made each month. The full entitlement, less the advance on account, is then paid during the first month of the quarter following that to which the reimbursement relates. The effect is that approximately 10 per cent. of reimbursements due for the final quarter of each financial year are actually paid during the first month of the following financial year. FHSAs should not commit themselves to making payments for practice staff and premises improvements to a value greater than the cash limit available for the year.

Doncaster Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have received hearing aids in the Doncaster health authority area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. J. G. S. Smith, chairman of Doncaster health authority, for details.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Doncaster health authority received lithotripsy treatment in the last 12 months; and how many are still awaiting such treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. Waiting lists are maintained according to the intended specialty of treatment, not by diagnosis or intended method of treatment. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. J. G. S. Smith, chairman of Doncaster health authority, for details.

Female Circumcision

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about female circumcision since 21 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of letters expressing concern about the practice of female circumcision, particularly following a recent BBC 2 programme on the subject.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State held a meeting on the subject on 4 March 1991. Those present at the meeting were my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), Lord Kennet, Mrs. Efun Dorkenoo of FORWARD (Foundation for Women's Health Research and Development) and officials of the Department.

The Department is to re-issue inter-departmental guidance on inter-agency working in cases of child protection. The new version is being revised to take account of the implementation of the Children Act 1989 and will draw attention to the Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985. Consideration will also be given as to how this guidance can be supported with more detailed advice.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each regional health authority area how many nursing clinical grading appeals have been heard so far at regional level, breaking down the total according to their outcome.

Mr. Dorrell: The information available at 28 February 1991 is given in the table:

Regions	Allowed	Disallowed	Failure to agree	Total England
Northern	11	7	42	60
Yorkshire	19	16	20	55

North Western	21	1	42	64
Total	239	62	603	904

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average cost associated with a single nursing clinical grading appeal hearing at (a) district level, (b) regional level and (c) United Kingdom level.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects nursing clinical grading appeals will be completed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many nursing clinical grading appeals are currently waiting to be heard at (a) district level, (b) regional level and (c) United Kingdom level; and how many appeals have already been completed at each of those levels.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for health when he expects the appeal on grading by nursing auxiliaries at the Alfred Norris unit, Musgrove park hospital, Taunton, to be heard at national level; and to what he attributes the delay in processing this appeal since it was lodged in January 1990.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many clinical grading appeals are outstanding; how many appeals are currently being held on a monthly basis; when he expects the outstanding clinical grading appeals to be completed; how many appointments he has made to the panels dealing with clinical grading appeals; how many panels there are; and what is the remuneration and/or expenses paid to each;

(2) if he will appoint more national appeals panels on clinical grading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Appeals against clinical grading decisions are heard under a complicated and time-consuming procedure agreed by the general Whitley council. When the clinical grading structure was negotiated, we offered to discuss a streamlined procedure for clinical grading appeals, but the nursing trades unions chose not to pursue this possibility.

Under the agreed procedure the management and staff sides of the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council are both required to appoint members for each appeal hearing at national level. We are making every effort to process appeals as quickly as possible but future progress will depend on a number of factors, particularly the availability of people who are suitably qualified to hear appeals. Both parties to the dispute meet their own expenses: management side members can claim expenses under normal rules.

There is no information held centrally on district level appeals. The information available on appeals at regional and national level at 28 February is as follows:

	Numbers of appeals received (England)	Number of appeals heard (England)
Regional	1,515	904
National	504	27

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The appeals by nursing auxiliaries at the Alfred Norris unit, Musgrove Park hospital, are likely to be heard at the end of April.

Disabled People

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for implementing the recommendations of the 1988 report on "Information Needs of Disabled People, Their Carers and Service Providers," prepared by Coopers and Lybrand.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This report, which has been widely welcomed, highlighted the importance of improving information services for disabled people and those who care for them. It recommended a three stage strategy:

- —the development of a national framework for the provision of information services to disabled people
- —the creation of local "federations" of information providers, responsive to the needs of the community
- —specific initiatives to develop improved common information services within the context of a national framework sensitive to local needs

In 1990, we commissioned a study by PE International to identify the managerial and resource requirements of implementing such a strategy. Following PEI's conclusions, we now intend to commit £3 million, subject to Parliamentary approval over three years (1991-1994) for a pilot initiative, known as the National Disability Information Projects, with the following objectives:

—Nationally, to promote closer working between organisations which collect and disseminate information of national relevance, with clear objectives to reduce duplication and improve the relevance and accuracy of information.

—Locally, to encourage the development of federations of information providers, in order to achieve greater co-ordination at the local level and to widen access to information.

The national disability information project will build on the achievements of a number of local federations already in existence, including those developed as part of the Oxford regional health authority information project which is supported by the Department of Health.

Dentists

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of courses of treatment provided by dentists within the Bromley family health service authority and (b) the total monthly sums of money paid to them in respect of January and February; and what were the corresponding figures for the months of January 1990 and February 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not possible to compare on a like-for-like basis the total numbers of courses of treatment in the two years requested. Under the new dental contract introduced in October 1990, national health service treatment of children is provided under a capitation system and does not involve "courses of treatment". The information requested about total fees payable to dentists is provided in the table:

Bromley family health services authority
Total fees scheduled for payment to national health service dentists for the months of January and February in 1990 and 1991

	1990 £	1991 £
January	516,466	484,425
February	443,311	413,103

Blood

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on charging for blood and blood products using blood donated through the blood transfusion service; what is the income from charges for 1990 nationally and in each NHS region; what is the level of charges imposed currently, in 1990, and in 1989; and what was the source of the income from charges, whether inside the NHS, or from private hospitals or from disposals to commercial organisations.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no charges made for blood which is freely donated in this country. The costs of collection, testing, processing, handling and transport, which are incurred in supplying non-NHS hospitals with blood and blood derivatives, are recovered by regional transfusion centres (RTCs). The handling charges for 1989-90 and 1990-91 and the income from the charges for the latest year available are shown in the table. Blood is not supplied to commercial organisations.

The regional health authorities have traditionally allocated funds direct to the RTCs to cover their operating costs. However, from April 1991 those funds will be devolved to the district health authorities and the RTCs will recover their operating costs in proportion to the hospital users demands on the RTC for blood supplies. The reimbursement will not include any element for the freely donated blood itself.

Confidentiality

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will issue draft guidance on the confidentiality of personal health information in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. The Department is currently working on draft guidance on the confidentiality of personal health information in the NHS. This will be issued for consultation shortly.

Children (Employment)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has received fresh evidence of illegal employment of children supplied by the child employment study carried out by the low pay unit and Birmingham city council; and if he has any plans to issue new guidelines to the Health and Safety Executive to enforce legislation relating to the employment of children;

(2) if he will now seek to implement the Employment of Children Act 1973;

(3) if he has any plans to review the minimum age above which a child may be legally employed;

(4) if he will initiate a review of all legislation affecting the employment of children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are studying the report published by the low pay unit and Birmingham city council in consultation with colleagues in other Departments with responsibility for enforcing current legislation on the employment of children. We shall then consider whether any further action is required to safeguard the welfare of such children.

Drugs (Costs)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the actual cost of drugs provided under the national health service per family for each of the years 1980 to 1990; and what each of these costs would have been if there had been no inflation since 1980.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table sets out the annual cost of drugs in the national health service in England per head of population (a) in cash terms and (b) at 1980-81 prices, for the financial years 1980-81 to 1989-90.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of private residential or nursing homes in each registration authority area which have closed within the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available centrally for nursing homes. Information about residential homes could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each local authority the number of directly provided care homes for the elderly which have either closed or transferred out of the local authority sector during each year since 1978.

Mr. Dorrell: The information that is available centrally could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Community Care

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the continuing care of the mentally ill in the community after the three years' allocation of the specific grant for the mentally ill has elapsed.

Mr. Dorrell: Consideration will be given to whether the specific grant needs to continue beyond 1993-94 in future public expenditure rounds; in the light of judgments about the adequacy of community care provision for people with a mental illness.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to monitor the use local authorities make of funds allocated for community care to ensure that the money is not used to fund other local authority functions.

Mr. Dorrell: Where resources are specifically allocated to support aspects of community care, the Audit Commission ensures through its audit of local authority accounts that those resources have been used for the purposes for which they were allocated. Additionally, the Department generally calls for reports from authorities on the use that has been made of such resources. For the most part, however, Government support for community care is distributed through the revenue support grant, leaving local authorities free to determine their own expenditure priorities, though the Department receives information from authorities which enables it to monitor expenditure on community care.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist local authorities unable to fund the 30 per cent. necessary to claim their entitlement to the specific grant for the mentally ill.

Mr. Dorrell: Local authorities' need to make a 30 per cent. contribution has already been taken into account in their standard spending assessment figure for the personal social services.

SCOTLAND

Salmon

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has of the effect of the North East England licensed net fishery upon Scottish salmon stocks returning to spawn in Scottish rivers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As required by section 39 of the Salmon Act 1986, the report to be presented to Parliament reviewing salmon net fisheries from the Humber to the Ugie will address the issue of adequacy of spawning escapement of salmon in the review area. A good deal of scientific information has been collated on this and other aspects of the review.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the report on East coast salmon netting, as reviewed under section 39(1) of the Salmon Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is hoped to present the report to Parliament shortly.

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the occupation of each health board member and the original nominating body of each member not included in his answer of 28 February, Official Report, columns 574-75.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdwon of the total number of nursing clinical grading appeals already heard at national level, stating how many resulted in an appeal being upheld, rejected or a failure to agree.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland 461 appeals have been heard at Scottish appeals committee level; 150 have been upheld, 167 rejected and in 144 cases the committee failed to reach agreement. In Great Britain 71 appeals from Scotland have been lodged with the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council and appropriate arrangements for determining their outcome are being made.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average cost associated with a single nursing clinical grading appeal hearing at (a) board level, (b) national level and (c) United Kingdom level.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the average cost of a clinical grading appeal at board, national and United Kingdom level is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish nursing clinical grading appeals are currently waiting to be heard at (a) board level, (b) national level and (c) United Kingdom level; and how many appeals have already been completed at each of those levels.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of nurse clinical grading appeals currently waiting to be heard and the number of appeals completed at board level is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. At Scottish appeals committee level 1,925 appeals were waiting to be heard and 461 had been completed at 1 March. No information is held on the total number of appeals lodged at United Kingdom level but in Great Britain as at 28 February, 602 appeals were lodged (71 from Scotland) of which eight have been heard (none from Scotland) and 589 are currently waiting to be heard.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Appeals against clinical grading decisions are heard under a complicated and time-consuming procedure agreed by the General Whitley Council and future progress will depend on a number of factors, particularly the availability of people who are suitably qualified to hear appeals. Consequently it is not possible to estimate when nurse grading appeals will be completed.

There is no information held centrally on board level appeals. The information available on appeals at Scottish appeals committee level and national (Great Britain) level is as follows:

	Number of Appeals Received (Scotland)	Number of Appeals heard (Scotland)
Scottish Appeals Committee	nearly 2,500	461
Great Britain	71	None

Liver Transplants

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to establish a liver transplant facility in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Our priority has been to establish a heart transplant unit in Scotland and we expect the first operations to be carried out at the end of this year in Glasgow royal infirmary.

Social Work Supervision Orders

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons aged under 16 years were placed on social work supervision orders in (a) Dundee, (b) Tayside and (c) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of children aged 0-17 years, who were under supervision requirements at 31 March each year, are set out in the table:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Dundee	237	260	307	357	322
Tayside	453	476	521	549	525
Scotland	8,099	8,582	8,333	8,387	8,533

Secure Accommodation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places in secure accommodation there are for persons aged under 16 years in Scotland; and where they are located.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Secure Unit	Region	Number of Places
Rossie School Montrose	Tayside	25
St. Mary's Kenmure School Glasgow	Strathclyde	24
Kerelaw School Stevenston	Strathclyde	24
Howdenhall Children's Unit Edinburgh	Lothian	5
Rimbleton House Glenrothes	Fife	2
Weedingshall Youth Care Centre, Polmont	Central	2
Closeburn Assessment Centre, Closeburn	Dumfries and Galloway	2

List D Schools

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of places available in list D schools in Scotland in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will indicate the average occupancy rate of these places in each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The list D category was abolished from 1 April 1986. The relevant information up to 1986 is as follows:

Year	Available places	Occupancy rate (Per cent.)
1980	1,509	86
1981	1,514	80
1982	1,349	77
1983	1,203	79
1984	1,099	78
1985	1,107	65
1986	857	75

The latest information on establishments used by local authorities for residential care after 1986 (including former list D schools) is set out in the statistical bulletin R6/1989 on "Residential Accommodation 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and locations of list D schools in Scotland which are (a) currently operating and (b) have closed down during the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The list D category was abolished from 1 April 1986, when local authorities assumed full funding responsibility for young people placed in residential care. Such establishments are required to be registered by local authorities. The following former list D schools are still operating:

Kibble, Paisley
Wellington, Penicuik
Geilsland, Beith
Oakbank, Aberdeen

Therapy in Schools

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to local education authorities concerning the provision of speech therapy, physiotherapy, occupational therapy and the teaching of dyslexic children in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Speech therapy, physiotherapy and occupational therapy may be special educational needs of children for which education authorities have responsibility under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. In such cases authorities usually make arrangements for health boards to make the necessary provision. Guidance on the identification, assessment and recording of special educational needs was given in circular 1087 issued on 9 December 1982.

The hon. Gentleman will be aware from the answer I gave him on 27 June 1990 that my Department has commissioned a research study which will offer guidance to teachers about the needs of children with specific learning difficulties. A report is expected in early 1992.

Cancer Screening Unit

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in supplying a mobile breast cancer screening unit at Woodside place, Glasgow to cover the Argyll and Clyde and Western Isles health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The first mobile unit, operating from Woodside place, Glasgow, began screening women in the Argyll and Clyde health board area on 15 August 1990. Several districts have been completed and screening will begin in Oban on 22 April 1991, with the mobile unit subsequently moving to Mull and Lochgilphead. The opportunity will be available to women from nearby islands to be screened at that time.

Screening is expected to take place in the Western Isles during autumn 1992.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in supplying a mobile breast cancer screening unit in Inverness to cover the Highland health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The mobile unit will operate from the static screening and assessment centre at Raigmore, Inverness and is currently undergoing final maintenance and equipment checks.

The intention is for the static and mobile screening service to begin screening in early summer.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women on average are screened at a mobile breast cancer screening unit in one year; and what is the cost of running one such unit and the number of units currently operational, by health board area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are six mobile breast cancer screening units currently operating in Scotland. The information on costs and numbers screened is not available as the service is not yet fully operational.

Industrial Sites

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on trends in the supply of fully serviced industrial sites in the past two years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information is not available in the form requested. The nearest equivalent information, available from the industrial sites register (the joint annual register of industrial land) is on sites which are immediately available or could be made available within one year. The data for 1985 to 1989 are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Area (hectares)	2,567	2,814	3,337	2,743	2,821
Number of sites	535	534	549	567	629

The 1989 survey is still being analysed, and figures may be liable to adjustment. The 1990 survey is under way.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much provision of fully serviced industrial sites has been made available by (i) Scottish new towns, (ii) Scottish Development Agency, (iii) Highland and Islands Development Board and (iv) Scottish local authorities, in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The information is not available in the form requested, but the following table may be helpful:

Provision for industrial sites in Scotland

[1] These figures relate to site development work only.
[2] These figures relate to total expenditure on factory building and industrial sites. Returns do not allow for site only information to be supplied.
[3] These figures (in hectares) are for land owned by the agencies and bodies shown and identified for industrial purposes. It includes both fully serviced and unserviced sites. The data is as published in the Industrial Sites Register. The data is as at 31 March for the year concerned, thus the 1,741 hectares shown for local authorities in the 1984-85 column shows the picture at 31 March 1985.
[4] The drop in the local authority entry for 1988 is explained by the introduction of new marketability criteria, as detailed in the published Commentary on the Industrial Sites Register 1988.
NYA—Not yet available.

High-technology Premises

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what high-technology premises are being planned or supplied for Scotland and by when.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 28 January 1991]: The supply of premises for high-technology companies is not monitored. The industrial sites register does not specifically record sites suitable for high-technology companies, and it would not be feasible to do so. Existing premises may often be sufficient to meet the needs of many such companies.

ENVIRONMENT

Audit Commission

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is responsible for auditing the work of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Key: Paragraph 12 of schedule 3 to the Local Government Finance Act 1982 requires the Commission to keep proper accounts and other records; to prepare a statement of account in respect of each financial year in the form directed by the Secretary of State; and submit the statement to him by the date he directs. The Secretary of State is required, on or before 30 November in each year, to transmit the statement of account to the Comptroller and Auditor-General who is required to examine and certify the statement of account and lay copies before Parliament with his report on it.

Leisure Centres

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has plans to ensure that local authorities who run leisure and entertainment complexes shall be required to publish at one and the same time capital and revenue accounts for each undertaking.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Local Authorities (Tendering)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards there are in the local authority competitive tendering process to ensure that the terms and conditions of the tender are not subsequently varied by mutual consent.

Mr. Key: Under part I of the Local Government Act 1988, local authorities must comply with a number of tendering requirements if they wish to use their own work-forces to carry out defined activities after dates set out in subordinate legislation. One of these requirements is that, in carrying out the work, they must comply with the detailed specification which was prepared as the basis for competitive tendering, although this will normally provide limited scope for some variation in the work to be done. The Secretary of State has sanction powers under the 1988 Act which he may use if he considers that an authority has failed to comply with the statutory requirements.

Urban Programme

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the city of Sheffield the number of projects which were not given approval for 1991-92 under the urban programme, indicating the nature of the projects rejected and giving a percentage figure, and a cash value figure, which related to the ethnic minority community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Sheffield urban programme for 1991-92 includes 105 new projects, of which 83 were approved on 1 March. The 22 projects which could not be approved have a total value of £1,035,000 and include five projects relating to the ethnic minority community costing £530,000.

My Department met Sheffield city council on 20 March and the council is now working up information on most of the 22 rejected projects in order to resubmit them. Any attempt to assess the number of projects finally rejected would therefore be premature.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make available to the public information concerning the nature of industrial waste being dumped in any given local authority area.

Mr. Baldry: Waste disposal plans drawn up and published by waste disposal authorities should give a picture of the industrial waste arising and where it goes for disposal within each authority's area.

The deposit of industrial waste is illegal unless authorised by a licence from the waste disposal authority under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Waste disposal authorities must keep registers of all such licences open to the public. Each licence shows the types of waste permitted at each site. Under section 64 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the information to be kept on public registers will be greatly expanded. The extent of this information will be prescribed in regulations on which my Department will be consulting publicly before the implementation of section 64.

Individual records are kept of the transport and disposal of the most difficult and harmful wastes, designated as special waste under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. These records are copied to waste disposal authorities. In a consultation paper ("Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Special Waste Regulations 1980, a Consultation Paper, Special Waste and the Control of its Disposal") issued by my Department and the Welsh Office last year, the Government proposed that registers of special waste records should be open for public inspection.

Climate Convention

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the inclusion of a commitment to the precautionary principle in the climate convention currently under inter-governmental negotiation.

Mr. Baldry: Negotiations for a framework convention on climate change are taking place under an inter-governmental negotiating committee established by the United Nations General Assembly. The United Kingdom is playing an active role in the negotiations and we hope that the convention will include an expression of the need for precautionary action in the face of serious or irreversible threats of environmental degradation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the specific grant received by each local authority in respect of (a) community charge rebate and (b) transitional relief for the year 1990-91.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information for 1990-91 to be placed in the Library of the House. I shall be in a position to publish a final figure for the amount of transitional relief given when local authorities submit their final grant claims later this year.

Water Pollution

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those rivers in England where prosecutions have been undertaken because of pollution; who were the polluters; what fines were levied; and what remedial measures were ordered in each case to prevent a recurrence of the pollution.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. The National Rivers Authority is responsible for enforcing water pollution controls, and is empowered to carry out operations to prevent or remedy pollution where appropriate.

I understand that the authority brought a total of 370 prosecutions for water pollution offences in England and Wales during its first year of operation to 31 August 1990.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards control of the dumping of rubbish and other pollutants from private boats in estuaries and inshore waters.

Mr. Baldry: Under the provisions of the 1989 Water Act it is an offence to cause or knowingly permit the entry of polluting or solid waste matter to "controlled waters", (which include estuaries and inshore waters), although the discharge of trade or sewage effluent from a vessel is excluded from these controls. The Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Pollution by Garbage) Regulations 1988, which extend to private boats, impose restrictions on the disposal of garbage, defined as all kinds of victual, domestic and operational waste, into the sea. The Merchant Shipping (Reception Facilities for Garbage) Regulations 1988 require every harbour authority in the United Kingdom to provide facilities for receiving garbage from ships.

The Gulf (Birds)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the International Council for Bird Preservation and RSPB reports on the Gulf birds.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: As I indicated to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 15 March at column 1392, I very much welcome the initiative taken by the International Council for Bird Preservation (ICBP) in sending two experts to the Gulf earlier this month.

The ICBP has now prepared a proposal for further work to survey the spring migration in the Gulf in April and May. We have been interested to see this and will consider it carefully and I understand that ICBP has discussed the proposal with the National Commission for Wildlife Conservation and Development in Saudi Arabia.

Oil-skimming Equipment, Bahrain

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who supplied and manufactured the oil skimming equipment handed over by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in Bahrain last week.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 March 1991]: The equipment was supplied by DESMI Ltd. from its factory in Newcastle, Staffordshire. These particular items were manufactured in Denmark by DESMI's parent company, A/S De Smithske, and use major United Kingdom components, particularly engines made by Lister Diesels, hydraulic equipment from Hamworthy Ltd. of Poole, Dorset, and valves manufactured by Chalwyn Valves Ltd.

Recycling Credits

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress in the introduction of recycling credits.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to the answer, 30 January 1991, c. 537]: The Touche Ross report on recycling credits commissioned by my Department has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. We will publish draft regulations and guidance on the calculation and payment of recycling credits for consultation with local authorities in due course, taking account of the advice we have received.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of people who have disappeared in Sri Lanka in the last three years; how many detainees are held by the Sri Lankan Government under emergency laws; what recent representations he has made to the Sri Lankan authorities on human rights abuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Reliable information is not available on the number of people who have disappeared or the number of detainees. We continue regularly to raise with the Sri Lankan Government our concerns about their human rights performance and the conduct of their security forces in dealing with the serious terrorist challenge they face.

Iraq (Humanitarian Assistance)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to Iraq via the European Community, the International Committee of the Red Cross, United Nations agencies, and other relief agencies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom supports the work of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations relief agencies in Iraq. This year we have already given £2·5 million to the ICRC's Gulf appeal and US $1 million to the United Nations appeal co-ordinated by UNDRO. In addition, the EC Commission has given £8·75 million to support the relief activities in the Gulf region. The share of this attributable to the United Kingdom's aid budget is £1·75 million. All these funds are available for use in Iraq.

In the light of reports from the ICRC and United Nations Under-Secretary-General Ahtisaari, the United Nations sanctions committee, with full British support, has now made a general determination that humanitarian circumstances apply with respect to the entire civilian population of Iraq in all parts of Iraq's national territory and that the civilian and humanitarian imports identified in Mr. Ahtisaari's report, which are integrally related to the supply of foodstuffs and supplies intended for medical purposes, should be allowed with immediate effect.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Lighting

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway there are in England and Wales; and what proportion of these are lit.

Mr. Chope: There are 1,640 miles of trunk motorway in England. About 30 per cent. of this length is lit. The Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for motorways in Wales.

Air Traffic Distribution

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which British-owned airlines were consulted prior to his recent announcement about traffic distribution rights at Heathrow airport; what steps he took to ensure that airlines flying services from Britain's regional airports could continue to do so; if he has discussed the allocation of Air UK's original slots with the Heathrow airport scheduling committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The hon. Member will be able to obtain from the CAA the names of the 54 United Kingdom airlines it consulted prior to offering advice on the need for the London traffic distribution rules. My right hon. and learned Friend explained in his statement of 5 March that removal of the rules did not impose any requirement on the operators of regional services to give up operating at Heathrow, and noted the existence of safeguards against unreasonable discrimination in an airport's trade practice or pricing policy. My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed with the Heathrow scheduling committee the allocation of slots previously used by Air UK, as the Government are not involved in the slot allocation process.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from British Northern Airlines about his Heathrow traffic distribution decisions and that airline's application to the Heathrow airport scheduling committee.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations from British Northern Airlines, although its concern to secure slots at Heathrow has been drawn to our attention by others. That is a matter for discussion between the airlines and the Heathrow scheduling committee.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review his decision on allocation of airlines to Heathrow in the light of the refusal by the Heathrow airport scheduling committee to allocate the slots previously used by Air UK to British Northern Airlines.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to review his decision to remove restrictions on access to Heathrow. The allocation of slots at the airport is the responsibility of the scheduling committee, which follows guidelines drawn up by the International Air Transport Association. The Government are not involved in the allocation process.

Holidaymakers (Consumer Protection)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Association of British Travel Agents over extending consumer protection for all holidaymakers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Consumer protection matters in general, including package holidays, are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry; I understand that the Association of British Travel Agents has had discussions with Ministers in his Department recently.

The Association of British Travel Agents has also written recently to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, supporting his request to the Civil Aviation Authority, as announced in his statement to the House on 11 March, for advice on possible arrangements to give financial protection to scheduled air passengers; air charter holidaymakers are already protected by the statutory bonding scheme for air travel organisers, and by the Air Travel Trust.

Offshore Standby Vessels

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 639, when his Department's latest standard for standby vessels will be applied to all such vessels.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest standard is expected to be published in April. New ships will be required to comply in full, but in view of the significant changes that are to be made there will be a staged introduction for existing ships.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to change the record keeping by his Department to enable him to know when standby vessels are on station in the North sea.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since early 1990 most owners have been providing on a weekly basis information on the locations and time their vessels are on station as a check on the periods of duty at offshore installations. When the revised code is published next month this information will be sought on a voluntary basis for all standby vessels. In his report on the Piper Alpha disaster Lord Cullen recommended that the owners of standby vessels should be required to notify the regulatory body weekly as to the locations and functions of their vessels in the ensuing week. This will of course be a matter for the Health and Safety Commission once responsibility has been transferred to it.

Drivers (Working Hours)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to introduce regulations to restrict the working of excessive hours by taxi and private hire drivers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government will be consulting trade organisations to establish whether the working of excessive hours is a widespread problem, posing a serious safety hazard. If it is, we shall have to identify appropriate remedial measures.

Goole Port

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many registered dock workers there were at the port of Goole for each of the years from 1985 to 1990; and how many of those dock workers are currently employed following the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of dockers registered at the port of Goole at the end of each year 1985 to 1988 and at 3 July 1989 when the dock labour scheme was abolished were as follows:

Numbers of registered dockworkers

Year	Numbers
1985	189
1986	169
1987	169
1988	165
3 July 1989	164

I have no information about how many of these are currently employed following abolition of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the total tonnage of exports and imports handled by the port of Goole in each year since 1985.

Mr. McLoughlin: Annual tonnages of foreign trade handled at the port of Goole since 1985 are as follows:

Thousand tonnes

	Exports	Imports	Total
1985	478	817	1,295
1986	369	909	1,278
1987	432	1,265	1,697
1988	497	1,603	2,100
1989	407	1,423	1,829
[1]1990	354	1,242	1,596

[1] Provisional.

Highway Maintenance

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the long-term cost of financing highway structural maintenance on the primary route network through capital rather than revenue expenditure will be reduced or increased as a result of the changes proposed by his Department.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The benefits of structural maintenance are primarily felt in future accounting periods. To compare the real cost of financing by means of borrowing and the cost of charging expenditure direct to revenue account, it is necessary to discount the nominal value of cash payments in future years to reflect the time intervals before they are made. The result of the comparison will depend on the rate of discount and the rate of interest.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances and for what reasons the Government record whether persons admitted to the United Kingdom are serving members of their armed forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Where relevant to the person's claim for admission, such information would be recorded on the landing card. However, landing cards are not completed for members of forces who are exempted from immigration control under section 8 of the Immigration Act 1971.

Life Sentences

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to make a statement about the Thynne, Wilson and Gunnell case following the European Court of Human Rights judgment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The implications of the European Court's judgment require full and careful consideration; we will put our proposals to Parliament as soon as we are able to do so.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department is issuing to local authorities in connection with the Children Act 1989.

Mr. John Patten: None, but extensive guidance has been issued by the Department of Health which has responsibility for this Act.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to protect the rights of those who do not wish to work or open their place of work on a Sunday, to remove the anomalies of the present Sunday trading laws and to replace the present legislation with a formula which allows limited shopping.

Mrs. Rumbold: The terms and timing of fresh legislation on Sunday trading remain to be determined, but our aim is that such legislation should be workable, enforceable and enjoy both popular and sufficient parliamentary support. Separate discussions to which I have invited the major groups interested in reform of the Sunday trading law may help to identify what particular provisions might satisfy these criteria.

Plastic Explosives

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Montreal agreement on the chemical labelling of plastic explosives.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 20 March 1991 at columns 113-14.

Security Firms

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for the registration of security firms and the establishment of minimum training requirements.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering a range of options for improving the regulation of the private security industry.

Immigration Rules

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make changes in the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 25 January 1991, c. 354]: My right hon. Friend is laying before Parliament today an immigration rules change to introduce a visa requirement for all citizens of Uganda with effect from 2 April.

Ugandans currently account for nearly one in 10 of all asylum applications in the United Kingdom and their numbers have risen sharply over a period in which there is general agreement that respect for human rights in Uganda has substantially improved. The introduction of a visa requirement should benefit all bona fide travellers who will be less likely to encounter delays on arrival in this country. Our entry clearance unit in Kampala is being strengthened to ensure an efficient service. Regular visitors to this country will be eligible for multiple entry visas.

ENVIRONMENT

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last issued guidance to owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest under the provisions of section 33 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and whether such guidance reflects the changes in SSSI notification procedures introduced in the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985.

Mr. Trippier: A code of guidance for sites of special scientific interest was published in 1982 and we shall be revising it later this year. Advice is also given in departmental circulars and in the Nature Conservancy Council's publication "Sites of Special Scientific Interest".

"This Common Inheritance"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the timetable he has set for the implementation of the policy objectives set out in the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance".

Mr. Trippier: Our White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", published on 25 September last year, was the first comprehensive statement of environmental policies and objectives by any United Kingdom Government. Over the last six months we have worked hard, proving that the White Paper means action, not just words. Thanks to the drive and commitment of the Government across the whole range of their activities, getting on for 100 White Paper initiatives have borne fruit so far.

In the field of investment, I announced last November an increase of 33 per cent., or £130 million, in planned expenditure for 1991-92 on protecting and improving the environment. This provided extra resources for purposes including environmental research, the countryside, the heritage, housing and urban initiatives, pollution control and waste disposal and recycling.

The Government have set up new institutions, including a permanent committee of Cabinet Ministers to consider environmental policies and follow up and roll forward the initiative taken by the White Paper. Each Government Department has nominated a Minister to consider the environmental implications of all of its policies and programmes. The first round of new annual departmental reports, many reporting at length on environmental initiatives, has been published. The first meeting of a new local government environmental forum has been held, and arrangements have been made to set up similar new fora involving business and the voluntary sector. In Europe, Britain has proposed amendments to the EC treaties to give the Community clearer competence on environmental matters and launched an initiative to promote the integration of the environment with other areas of Community policy.

In the field of planning, a consultation paper has been issued on tighter controls over agricultural and forestry buildings. The Department of the Environment has published a report and consultation paper on the protection of hedgerows. The planning Bill has been introduced, with proposals which will implement many of the improvements described in the planning chapter of the White Paper. A consultation paper has been issued giving proposals for the application of environmental assessment to private Bills. New guidance has been published on subjects including archaeology and planning, the interaction of planning and transport and planning aspects of the extraction of cement.

In the field of environmental technology, waste minimisation and recycling, the Department of Trade and Industry in conjunction with the Department of the Environment has launched the new £12 million environmental technology innovation scheme as well as its own environmental management options scheme. An extra £60 million over three years has been announced to upgrade and replace municipal incinerators. A further £31 million will be available over the same period to help authorities improve standards at landfill sites, transfer stations and civic amenity sites and £40 million of resources will be available to enable authorities to invest in effective recycling schemes. The derelict land programme for 1991-92 has been increased by £15 million.

Research projects have been commissioned on recycling building waste and waste from quarries and mines. Studies to monitor the results of pilot recycling projects in a number of cities have been commissioned. The Department of the Environment and the Scottish Office have announced the introduction of a new system of registration for carriers of waste. At present, local authorities are responsible both for disposing of waste themselves and for regulating the way in which others do so. The DOE has issued draft circulars for local authorities on arrangements to separate these functions by the formation of new local authority waste disposal companies. In line with the United Kingdom's policy, a recommendation on international self-sufficiency in waste management has been adopted by the OECD. Extra resources have been announced by the Department of the Environment for improving local authority disposal and recycling facilities, and a code of practice has been issued on standards of cleanliness in public places and the best means of dealing with litter.

In the fields of pollution control and air quality, a practical guide has been published to the system of integrated pollution control through which the Government have given a new push to the process of designing out pollution problems from the most potentially polluting processes. Detailed regulations have been laid to implement both these controls and the supplementary air pollution controls by local authorities. The Government have achieved agreement in the EC on standards for new large diesel engines. A new advisory group on medical aspects of air pollution episodes has been announced by the Department of Health. The Department of the Environment has produced a model describing critical loads of air pollution—the loads that a particular environment can tolerate without adverse effects—and has also announced funding for an expanded air quality monitoring network and new arrangements to provide information on air pollution for weather bulletins. As from 1 April, 25 process guidance notes will be published covering processes for local authority pollution control.

The Chancellor, in the Budget, raised the duty on petrol and derv by 15 per cent., substantially above inflation. With the VAT increase in April the tax differential between leaded and unleaded petrol will rise to 4p a litre, giving a further boost to unleaded, whose market share has risen from 30 to 39 per cent. over the last year. The Budget also put up employers' national insurance contributions on company cars and raised income tax on car sales by a further 20 per cent.

Also in the field of transport, the agreement that the Government have been pressing for on a consolidated directive applying to emissions from cars of all sizes has been reached. From November this year an emissions check will be included in the MOT test. A Road Traffic Bill has been introduced by the Department of Transport which contains provisions to improve the enforcement of speed limits. The first pilot "red route" scheme has been introduced. Plans have been announced for six demonstration projects on the best way to integrate bypasses with traffic management schemes.

As for the countryside, a start has been made on planting a new national forest in the midlands. Extra funds have been announced for national park authorities, the Countryside Commission and the Groundwork Trust. Proposals have been announced for additional planning control safeguards over sites of special scientific interest. Agriculture departments in England and Wales have gone out to consultation on a draft code embodying new advice on best practice to reduce agricultural water pollution. My right hon. Friend has announced that he proposes to revoke a deemed planning permission to develop housing on the edge of Canford heath, a site of acknowledged international importance for nature conservation.

Internationally, the Government have continued to make a major contribution to efforts to agree a global convention on climate change and to work for a successful United Nations conference on environment and development in 1991. In the field of overseas assistance, the Government announced in November 1990 a new public expenditure sub-programme, separate from the budget for aid for developing countries, on global environmental assistance. For this, the Government have pledged £40 million to the global environment facility being established under the leadership of the World bank, UNDP and UNEP to help developing countries tackle global environmental problems.

In the field of energy, the Government are drawing up plans for a major publicity campaign and extra research on domestic energy efficiency. The Department of Energy's new home energy efficiency scheme has been launched. The Department of the Environment has launched a pilot programme of energy efficiency measures in local authority housing. The Department of Energy has announced a £4 million increase in research into renewable energy. With the active participation of the United Kingdom, the second world climate conference in Geneva agreed the basic shape of a global strategy on climate change. Thanks in no small part to the Department of Energy's efforts, obsolete EC rules that made it harder than it need be to switch to gas from more polluting fuels for generating electricity have been repealed, and a new ministerial committee has been established to oversee all aspects of energy efficiency.

In the field of the heritage, state funds are to be available for the first time for the repair of historic cathedrals. The scheme will be launched on 3 April. A total of £11·5 million of new money has been set aside for grants for cathedrals over this and the next two years.

In the field of water, to help reduce water pollution regulations have been introduced setting standards for farm waste facilities and oil stores. A total of £23 million extra grant in aid for the National Rivers Authority has been announced. The maximum fines for water pollution in magistrates courts have been increased tenfold to £20,000; the fines in Crown courts are unlimited.

In the field of noise, the report of the Government's noise review working party has been issued for consultation.

In the field of wider environmental knowledge, the Department of the Environment has issued its detailed consultation paper on its proposed new, more comprehensive environmental statistical report. Consultation with industry and consumer groups is continuing on the outlines of a new eco-labelling scheme. A new leaflet—"Wake Up To What You Can Do For The Environment"—has been published and widely distributed to tell individuals how they can help.

In Scotland, legislation has been introduced establishing Scottish Natural Heritage. A project team has been appointed to bring the Government's new rural enterprise programme into operation. A fuller list of Scottish Office achievements is in its press notice also issued today.

In Wales, £41 million funding was announced for the Welsh Development Agency's initiatives "Landscape Wales" and "Urban Development Wales" in 1991-92, with £7 million urban programme support for environmental improvements. An environmental competition for schools is being run with £5,000 cash prizes donated by Welsh Water plc.

In Northern Ireland, work has started on a code to support the Government's new countryside management strategy. Core funding has been announced for the establishment of a regional Tidy Britain Group office in Belfast, and a consultation paper has been issued on energy efficiency in Northern Ireland. An Environment Week will also be held at the end of April.

This is only a selection of the very wide range of action that the Government have in hand in order to push ahead with their environmental strategy. Vigorous action will continue, not only to fulfil the individual commitments made in the White Paper, but to roll forward the process of addressing tomorrow's environmental challenges. With co-operation from everyone—individuals, as well as local authorities, businesses, schools and voluntary organisations—I am confident that those challenges can be met with courage and success.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the individuals and organisations being consulted in the process of completion of the statistical report on the environment being prepared as a result of a commitment in "This Common Inheritance".

Mr. Trippier: Around 250 organisations have been consulted and 94 written responses have been received by my Department. A list of consultees and those organisations from which written responses have been received has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Doncaster (Grants)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount per head of revenue support grant, area protection grant, inner London education special grant and of all grants payable to Doncaster metropolitan borough council for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The available information for Doncaster MBC for 1991-92 is as follows:

	£/Head of relevant population
RSG	226
Area Protection Grant	80

In addition after the enactment of the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill, Doncaster MBC will receive payment of £140 for each personal community charge paid or, in the case of standard or collective charges, equivalent.

Information on the amounts of transitional relief grant, community charge benefit grant and specific grants payable to Doncaster MBC in 1991-92 is not available.

"Wake Up To What You Can Do For The Environment"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his departmental leaflet, "Wake Up To What You Can Do For The Environment" have been printed; what plans exist for additional print runs; how the leaflet is being distributed and to which target audiences; how much the printing and distribution has cost to date; and whether any external consultants were involved in the design and content of the leaflet.

Mr. Baldry: Five million copies of the leaflet have been printed; additional print runs will depend upon demand. The leaflet is being distributed through supermarkets with the generous assistance of Tesco, Sainsbury's, the Co-op, Safeway and Asda; and at the Department's stand at the ideal home exhibition. Local authorities have been invited to assist in distribution; and copies are available on request from the Department. The target audience for the leaflet is the general public. Printing and distribution have cost £180,000 to date. Consultants were commissioned to conduct market research on a pilot version of the leaflet, and the leaflet was designed by outside contractors.

Common Land

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward new common land legislation in pursuance of the recommendations of the Common Land Forum in 1986 and the policy statement made by the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 26 July 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: It remains our policy, as stated by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 26 July 1990, to safeguard the status of common land and to strengthen the ways in which we protect and use it. We recognise that this requires legislation to implement it, and the importance of such legislation. I regret, however, that, given the pressures on the parliamentary timetable, we cannot see any opportunity to legislate comprehensively during the lifetime of this Parliament.

We have also considered very carefully the proposal for a short Bill put to us by amenity bodies. We have concluded that this would not have sufficient advantages to be a priority candidate, in the light of the reservations expressed by other interested parties.

Land Planning

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what use is made by his Department in developing land use planning policy of geographic information systems and digital terrain models.

Mr. Yeo: The Department of the Environment is involved in several applications of geographic information systems—GIS—and digital terrain models, mainly through its research programme. The inclusion of GIS along with other technologies is also being considered in the Department's information technology strategy.

The following GIS applications are of most relevance to the development of land use planning policy:

- In 1990 the Department undertook a survey of the stock of vacant land in urban areas of England. A GIS was used to select the sample for the survey.
- A research project is being undertaken to explore the potential uses of GIS in the analysis of countryside data.
- A further research project using the Department's land use change statistics applied GIS technology to analyse the data and to report on ways in which the data can be used to monitor planning policies.
- In the Countryside 1990 survey GIS is being used to link together broad-brush census information from satellite remote sensing and data from ground surveys to provide valuable ecological information about plant species and habitats.

Further information about some of these projects can be found in the article "Government in Action", written by my officials for inclusion in the 1991 yearbook of the Association for Geographic Information. A copy of the article has been placed in the Library.

Council House Sales, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much extra money Bolton council would receive in capital receipts if its sales of council houses were now brought into line with the national average for sales since 1981.

Mr. Yeo: A total of 2,200 extra sales would be needed to catch up with the average for England, or 1,000 to come in line with the rest of the region. The receipts cannot be predicted reliably, but in recent months the average discounted selling price for council houses in Bolton has been about £11,000.

Homelessness

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent consideration he has given to the use of capital receipts by local authorities with a view to introducing more flexibility into the system in order to provide accommodation for homeless people.

Mr. Yeo: We have already introduced a number of relaxations to the rules on the use of capital receipts by local authorities, in particular to encourage provision of low-cost housing. We intend to keep these rules under review to ensure that they are fully achieving our policy aims.

Recycling Credits

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the report on recycling credits produced for his Department by Touche Ross management consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice).

EC Environment Council

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the outcome of the European Community Environment Council on 18 March; and what progress was made towards green labelling.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 20 March, Official Report, column 129. The discussion on eco-labelling revealed widespread general support for the Commission's proposal, but reservations from a number of member states, including the United Kingdom, about the structures and procedures for administering the scheme. We made clear our concern that the proposal should be agreed as soon as possible and look forward to significant progress at the next meeting of the Council.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on cost recovery charges for regulation of radioactive substances.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 provides for the introduction of charges to cover the costs incurred by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—MAFF—in regulating the holding of radioactive material, and the accumulation and disposal of radioactive waste, under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. With the agreement of the Treasury and the consent of the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have now made a scheme of fees and charges, to take effect from 1 April 1991. I have placed a copy of the scheme in the Library.

Last July, the Government published a consultation document inviting comments on proposed charging arrangements, with fees and charges based on a division of premises into four "bands" designed to relate the level of charges to the amount of regulatory effort involved. The Department received 17 responses on the proposals, a list of which has been placed in the Library. Copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library.

Respondents generally endorsed the banded structure, and the scheme now made operates on this basis. Band 1 and 2 premises—BNFL Sellafield and the 30 or so nuclear power stations and other premises subject to licensing under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965—will be charged individually on the basis of the actual regulatory time and costs incurred. Charges for band 3 and 4 operators will be on the basis of a series of flat-rate fees, for consideration of applications for authorisation or registration, for the subsequent variation of an authorisation or registration, and annual subsistence charges for holding each authorisation or registration to cover the on-going costs of inspection, monitoring and oversight.

For band 3 operators—for example, major laboratories, major industrial users—the application and variation fees will be £800, and the annual subsistence charge £400. For band 4 operators—for example, smaller industrial users—the application and variation fees will be £300. The annual subsistence charge will be £75, but this will apply only to those holding larger closed sources. The majority of band 4 operators, holding smaller, closed sources, will not pay any annual charge, since these sources do not require routine inspection.

HMIP and MAFF will closely monitor their regulatory expenditure, and at the end of the financial year accounts and information on charge income and regulatory costs will be published.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest appropriate figures for (a) rate support grant per head, (b) business rate income per head, (c) total aggregate extended finance per head, (d) spending per head, (e) total aggregate spending and (f) population for each local authority in England.

Mr. Key [holding answer 20 March 1991]: I am arranging for the available information for 1991-92 to be placed in the Library of the House. Information on total aggregate finance and spending, which include specific grants, will not be available until authorities send in their detailed budget returns to the Department.

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the proportion of total local government spending accounted for by (a) education, (b) the police, (c) other services at present provided by county councils and (d) services provided by district councils.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 March 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Total Local Authority Net Current Expenditure

	Budget Estimates 1990-91
	Percentage
Education (all authorities)	46·3
Police (all authorities)	11·9
Other services (county councils)	13·4
All services (non-metropolitan district councils)	8·1

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what central grants were paid in 1990-91 and will be paid in 1991-92 (a) in total to each of the councils of Wandsworth, Westminster and Coventry and (b) per capita to Coventry.

Mr. Key [holding answer 22 March 1991]: Amounts of revenue support grant, adjusted for safety net, special grants and the community charge grant are as follows:

	1990-91 £ Million	1991-92 £ Million
Wandsworth	153·1	192·8
Westminster	114·0	162·8
Coventry	84·0	111·8
£/Head of relevant population
Coventry	385	503

In addition authorities receive transitional relief grant, community charge benefit grant and other specific grants. Information on the amounts payable for 1990-91 are as follows; information for 1991-92 will not be available until authorities send in their detailed budget returns to the Department.

	1990-91 £ Million
Wandsworth	11·1
Westminster	7·3
Coventry	32·4
£/Head of relevant population
Coventry	148

Service Personnel

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exclude service men and women from any new charges in relation to local government finance.

Mr. Key [holding answer 25 March 1991]: It is our intention that the proposed new local tax will take account of the number of adults in a household and the value of the property. We will be consulting on the various options, including the coverage of the new tax.

United Nations Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the key points of his speech on environment and development given to the conference, "What On Earth Is To Be Done", on 19 March.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 March 1991]: Copies of my right hon. Friend's speech on this occasion have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he met the Secretary General of the 1992 United Nations special conference on environment and development during his visit to London on 19 March.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 March 1991]: No, but my right hon. Friend has arranged to see Mr. Strong in London next month.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, during his visit to the conference, "What On Earth Is To Be Done", he discussed with the youth representative speakers the matters they raised in regard to the responsibilities of the developed nations to assist in environmental protection of the poorer nations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 March 1991]: My right hon. Friend listened with interest to a number of speakers on such subjects.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Charles Stewart Parnell (Statue)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will discuss with the appropriate authorities arrangements to move the statue of Charles Stewart Parnell to a more prominent location on the Committee Floor.

Mr. MacGregor: I have arranged for the hon. Member's proposal to be brought to the attention of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art in the House of Commons chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pools Scheme

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the pools scheme to benefit the arts and sports will operate on a national or a regional basis.

Mr. Mellor: It will be for the trustees to determine the detailed method of operation of the foundation for sport and the arts once it has been established. However, I understand from the proposers that it is the intention that the foundation will operate throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who will determine, and distribute to the arts, the sums raised by the pools scheme announced in his Budget statement.

Mr. Mellor: It will be for the trustees to determine in detail how funds will be distributed once the foundation is established.

Interest (Taxation)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements the Inland Revenue is making to handle the increase in repayment claims which will result from changes in the taxation of bank and building society interest.

Mr. Maude: The Inland Revenue has undertaken an extensive publicity campaign to encourage all those who are eligible to register for payment of bank and building society interest without deduction of tax and so avoid the need to claim a repayment. Nevertheless, in the year 1992-93, the Inland Revenue needs to plan for a substantial increase in claims to repayment of tax deducted at source from interest and other investment income. The numbers are inevitably very uncertain, but could be well over 10 times the present annual total of around 800,000 claims.

It is likely that a high proportion of the claims will be made in the period from April to July each year. The Inland Revenue has had to look for a balance between the standards of service it can offer and the need to spread the work to some extent over the year, in order to keep costs down to a reasonable level. I have decided that the Inland Revenue should base its planning on the principle that the time taken to deal with any claim should not exceed three months. The Inland Revenue is setting up 24 new offices around the country to deal with the work. They will, of course, try to keep the time taken to process a claim to the minimum. But there may be occasions, especially in the period from April to July, when the volume of claims received makes it impossible to process them without delay.

Fixed-profit Car Scheme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the tax-free mileage rates which will be used under the fixed-profit car scheme by the Inland Revenue for 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: The rates which will apply for 1991-92 are as follows:—

	Cars up to 1000cc	Cars 1001—1500cc	Cars 1501—2000cc	Cars over 2000cc
Up to 4,000 business miles	24·5p	30p	34p	45.0p
Over 4,000 business miles	11·0p	13p	16p	20·5p

An Inland Revenue press release is being issued today giving further details of the fixed-profit car scheme.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Climate Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the level of funding allocated in real terms over the next five years by the Natural Environment Research Council for climate research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The science budget has been announced for the period up to 1993-94. Within its allocations, the Natural Environment Research Council is currently planning to spend the following on climate research in real terms:

31·0	29·8	27·5

Playing Fields

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of secondary schools in England and Wales; how many of them intend to sell off playing fields over the next 18 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The latest available figures show that there were 4,208 maintained secondary schools in England and Wales in January 1990. Information on any plans to dispose of playing fields, either in part or whole, at these schools is not available to the Department. Minimum standards for playing fields at maintained schools are set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. The disposal of surplus playing fields is a matter for the local education authorities concerned. We expect authorities to review the long-term need for such facilities before taking decisions on disposals.

Football Grounds

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about admission prices to football grounds for youngsters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received two representations about admission prices to football grounds for youngsters attending away matches. The prices charged for admission to football matches are a matter for the football authorities and the individual clubs.

In-service Training

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increase or decrease there has been or is proposed in in-service training by local education authorities in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what assessment he has made of the amount of in-service training (a) necessary and (b) being delivered relating to the national history curriculum.

Mr. Fallon: No figures are collected for the total volume of in-service training undertaken by local education authorities. It is for schools and local education authorities to decide how much training is required by their teachers in respect of any particular subject.

Single-sex Schools

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on single-sex educational provision in boroughs with multi-ethnic populations.

Mr. Fallon: There is no statutory duty on local education authorities to provide single-sex schools, and it is for them to decide how to respond to parental preferences for such schools. When considering new proposals from authorities either to establish or to close single-sex schools, my right hon. and learned Friend will consider each case on its merits, taking into account the extent of parental demand for this type of provision.

National Curriculum (History)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he took in setting out the standards to be achieved in the national history curriculum, of the difficulty of working-class children in getting access to museums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The requirements of the national curriculum—including those of the order for history which my right hon. and learned Friend published yesterday—apply to all registered pupils of compulsory school age at maintained schools. It is for local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers to exercise their functions under the Education Reform Act 1988 to make sure that those requirements are met, and they should ensure that all pupils are provided with all necessary learning opportunities. It is up to schools to decide how best to introduce their pupils to artefacts and historical sources. They may use their budgets to cover the cost of museum visits.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to assure himself that primary school teachers have sufficient expertise and training in history to teach the national history curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: It is for schools and local education authorities to assure themselves that their teachers are equipped to deliver the national curriculum. The Government are providing support through their programme of specific grants and the National Curriculum Council and School Examinations and Assessment Council are also producing and disseminating curriculum guidance and in-service training materials.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps have been taken to include the study of racial and sexual diversity in local, national and world links in the national history curriculum; and what specific steps have been taken to enable local education authorities and local museums to train teachers in this aspect of the curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the order for national curriculum history published yesterday. This should enable pupils to develop knowledge and understanding of British, European and world history. Local education authorities are encouraged to have due regard to multicultural and equal opportunities aspects in drawing up their training programmes in relation to national curriculum foundation subjects.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those further education colleges which he has visited between his appointment as Secretary of State and Thursday 21 March.

Mr. Eggar: As Minister responsible for further education, I have visited the following colleges:

Enfield college
South Tyneside college
Manchester college of arts and technology
Hammersmith and West London college
Thomas Danby college
Capel Manor college
Bournville college
Wirral metropolitan college
North Tyneside college
Milton Keynes college
Tower Hamlets college
Keighley college
Solihull college of technology
Suffolk college of higher and further education
Tresham college

Supply Teachers

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the effectiveness for the administrative and resource arrangements allowing for the appointment of supply teachers to cover for teachers undertaking in-service training in connection with the national curriculum.

Mr. Fallon: It is for schools and local education authorities to manage and assess their arrangements for in-service training. The senior chief inspector's report for 1989-90 notes the problems they are facing and the ways in which they are tackling them. The Department has commissioned studies by the National Foundation for Educational Research and Sussex university on best practice in this area, which have been made available to local education authorities and will be placed in the Library.

Polytechnics and Colleges (Land Disposal)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conditions are attached to the disposal of Exchequer-funded land and buildings by polytechnics and colleges.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The conditions are the same as those which have applied to universities since 1985, and allow the retention of the proceeds of the sale of Exchequer-funded land and buildings, within specified limits, without reference to the annual appropriation procedures. These conditions are among those set out in financial memoranda between the Department and the Universities Funding Council and Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, copies of which I am placing in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Human Rights Abuse

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those occasions over the past year when Her Majesty's Government have made representations to Governments involved in the allied military coalition in the Gulf war concerning human rights abuses in their respective countries; and if he will indicate the criteria adopted by the Government in deciding why and when such representations are made.

The Prime Minister: No. Where allegations of abuse are well founded the Governments concerned are in no doubt of our concerns. Our criteria for representations are set out in the foreign policy document "Human Rights in Foreign Policy", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Gulf War

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish an inquiry into the economic effects of the Gulf war upon the countries of sub-Saharan Africa, the Horn of Africa and Bangladesh, the Republic of the Philippines and the Indian sub-continent.

The Prime Minister: The Government have studied the analysis produced by the International Monetary Fund, World bank and others on the economic effects of the Gulf war. We have supported the rapid steps taken by the international institutions to adapt their facilities to assist affected countries. Fortunately, the fall in oil prices at the outbreak of war, and the rapid conclusion of hostilities mean that the adverse effects will not be as severe as initially feared.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what representations were received by Her Majesty's Government (a) from 2 August 1990 to 16 January 1991 and (b) from 17 January to 8 February concerning the negative ecological consequences of military action in the Gulf; from which organisations and individuals he received the representations; and what response he made to each.

The Prime Minister: Several thousand letters have been received on the subject of the illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq and its aftermath, including the ecological damage caused by deliberate release of oil into the Gulf and firing of the Kuwait oil fields.

Oil

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will propose an international scheme to make available oil at a substantially reduced price to the least developed states to assist them to restore the damage to their economies resulting from the Gulf war.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has provided through the European Community some £60 million to Jordan, Turkey and Egypt, the states whose economies were most directly affected by the Gulf conflict. Given the size of our military role in the Gulf conflict we consider that the United Kingdom should not make a further financial contribution; the burden should be shared by others. We have however encouraged the IMF and the World bank to make additional resources available on concessional terms to the poorest countries most affected. The IMF has made specific arrangements to compensate countries affected by higher oil prices. Where the international community is providing such assistance, it will enable those countries to maintain imports of oil at market prices. We believe that providing oil at reduced prices would lead to economic distortions and a wasteful use of energy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chicago Expo

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what fiscal incentives or grants are available to support British manufacturers wishing to exhibit at the Expo to be held on 8 April in Chicago.

Mr. Sainsbury: Normal terms of support provided for groups of British firms in overseas trade fairs were made available for the environmental technology Expo and the design engineering and plant engineering exhibitions which are part of the "national manufacturing week" in Chicago from 8 April 1991. The support takes the form of a subsidy of 50 per cent. of space and stand costs, together with assistance towards travel costs, for eligible companies.

A DTI-supported group will exhibit at the design engineering and plant engineering exhibitions, but there was insufficient demand from industry to justify support of a group at the environmental technology Expo.

Namibia

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the value of trade between Namibia and the United Kingdom in 1990-91, broken down by sector;

(2) what has been the total value of exports from the United Kingdom to Namibia since that country won its independence;

(3) what has been the total value of imports to the United Kingdom from Namibia since that country won its independence.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on trade with Namibia is published monthly in "Business Monitor MM20, Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" which is in the Library of the House. Tables ii—imports—and v—exports —contain data for Namibia.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Ridley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total expenditure of the Department of Industry in 1979-80, and the total expenditure on the same votes in 1989-90, in real terms; and what was the one expressed as a percentage of the other.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The information requested is shown in the following table, taking equivalent Department of Trade and Industry programmes in 1989-90. Running costs have been excluded because, owing to changes in departmental organisation, these cannot be presented on a comparable basis.

£ million

	1979-80	1989-90 current prices	1989-90 constant prices
Department of Industry expenditure (excluding running costs, nationalised industries and public corporations)	942	830	409
Nationalised industries	1,108	−13	−6
Public corporations	70	0	0
Total	2,120	817	403

The sum of £409 million is 43 per cent. of £942 million and £403 million is 19 per cent. of £2,120 million.

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to change the condition of United Kingdom arms control and licensing procedures as a result of the Single European Act.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 March 1991]: There are no plans to change the present controls on arms exports which reflect national and international security considerations. Such exports will continue to be subject to stringent export licensing procedures, consistent with our obligations under the treaty of Rome and the Single European Act. My officials are discussing with other Government Departments the possibilities for streamlining procedures relating to exports to our Community partners after 1992.

Israel

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Export Credits Guarantee Department will reduce the premium it is currently charging on credit for British firms wishing to place contracts in Israel for housing of Soviet immigrants; and what information he has on the equivalent premium charged by Britain's main trading competitors.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 March 1991]: As part of its new portfolio management system, the Export Credits Guarantee Department is currently reviewing its premium rates for project business exports to a number of countries including Israel. The review should be completed shortly.

The ECGD assesses premium rates after taking into account the risks involved. The rates generally charged by other export credit agencies are taken into account, but it is necessary to draw a balance which recognises the costs to the taxpayer which can be involved in supporting project business.

Envirotech York Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contribution his Department made to the recent Envirotech York exhibition held at the university of York; and if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards regionally sponsored trade exhibitions for environmental technologies.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 21 March 1991]: My Department provided some financial support to the organisers of the Envirotech York exhibition through its regionally administered technology transfer scheme. In addition, the Minister for Industry officially opened the exhibition and my Department had a stand at it.

The thrust of DTI technology policy is generally national. DTI regional offices can provide support where the aim of a trade exhibition or other local activity is to improve the competitiveness of small and medium-sized companies in the region by promoting the wider and better use of modern technology, including environmental technologies.

Military Exhibitions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all licensing regulations that apply to the import of military technology and equipment for the purpose of display at military equipment and armament shows held in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 March 1991]: All products requiring an individual import licence by virtue of the Import of Goods (Control) Order 1954 as amended are listed in the open general import licence of 4 December 1987 as amended, which is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Military technology and equipment which do not incorporate items listed under entry No. 365 do not require a specific import licence and may be imported under the authority of the open general import licence.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about changes in the arrangements for recruitment to the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Responsibility for recruitment to junior grades in the civil service was transferred from the civil service commissioners to Departments on 1 January 1983. My right hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Sir R. Luce) the then Minister of State, announced on 13 April 1989 that it was proposed to extend further the area of recruitment which is the responsibility of Departments and agencies from 1 April 1991.

To give effect to the new recruitment arrangements the Civil Service Order in Council 1991 and a separate Diplomatic Service Order in Council 1991 were made at a meeting of the Privy Council held on 5 February 1991. The orders, copies of which have been placed in the Library, revoke and re-enact with substantial amendments the Civil Service Order in Council 1982.

From 1 April 1991, recruitment to all grades—except those at grade 7 level and above and their fast-stream feeder entries—will become the responsibility of Departments and agencies. This extends the area of recruitment for which Departments and agencies are responsible from the present 85 per cent. or so of all recruitment to over 95 per cent.

It is important that recruitment into the civil service should continue to be uninfluenced by patronage or partiality. Selection on merit on the basis of fair and open competition has been the fundamental principle of civil service recruitment since the Northcote-Trevelyan reforms. This principle will be preserved both in selection undertaken by Departments and agencies—departmental recruitment—and in selection undertaken on the responsibility of the civil service commissioners—commissioners' recruitment. Certain exceptions to the general principle, which allow for flexibility in specific circumstances, are set out in schedules to the orders.

The changes are an essential part of the process of modernising the civil service and of giving managers more autonomy in the use of resources. They reflect the current change in the role of the central departments, with the emphasis switching from regulation and control to advice, audit and the provision of cost-effective services.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Gulf War

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any assessment has been made of the economic consequences of the Gulf war on Commonwealth countries in Africa, central and south-east Asia and the Caribbean; when he next expects to meet the Secretary General of the Commonwealth to discuss these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have looked carefully into the economic consequences of the Gulf crisis on major recipients of British aid, taking into account the analytical work done by the IMF, World bank and others. The Secretary of State and I both meet the Secretary General of the Commonwealth from time to time to discuss matters of concern to Commonwealth members.

Africa (Famine Relief)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all allocations of famine relief for Africa made between September 1984 and September 1985, in current and constant 1991 prices, and since September 1990 to date.

Mrs. Chalker: Allocations of British emergency aid to Ethiopia between September 1984 and September 1985 are listed on pages 66 and 67 of the Foreign Affairs Committee's first report in the 1987-88 Session on "Famine in the Horn of Africa".

Allocations of famine relief made to African countries in 1990 were given in my reply to the hon. Member's question of 29 January at columns 462-63. In 1991 the following commitments have been made:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Environmental Issues

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Government's response to the Environment Select Committee's report on environmental issues in Northern Ireland will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Government's response is being published today and a copy has been placed in the Library. We are committed to safeguarding Northern Ireland's rich natural and man-made environment and we welcome the report as a constructive and opportune contribution towards achieving this end.

The Government recognise the need to accelerate action to conserve and enhance the environment in Northern Ireland and are making available substantially increased resources to deal with the backlog of environmental legislation and to protect valuable habitats.

Much has already been done. Some 20 per cent. of Northern Ireland currently lies within designated areas of outstanding natural beauty. There are seven country parks, 44 national nature reserves and 26 areas of special scientific interest. The Giant's Causeway is a world heritage site and Lough Neagh and Lough Beg have together been designated as a wetland of international importance under the Ramsar convention. Consultations are under way which will lead to the declaration of the internationally important Strangford Lough as a marine nature reserve. Some 167 historic monuments are in state care and almost 1,000 monuments have been scheduled for protection; 26 conservation areas have been designated and 7,800 buildings of architectural and historic importance listed.

Progress has also been made in dealing with pollution. Significant advances have been made in reducing smoke and SO_2 levels since the clean air legislation was introduced in 1964. Some 95 per cent. of rivers are classified as good or fair under the national river classification scheme. The large number of prosecutions for water pollution offences in Northern Ireland is evidence of the Government's determination to protect this asset.

The Government are reviewing their rural planning policy. The review will take account of the duty to preserve, on the one hand the natural beauty of the countryside and on the other the needs of a strong rural society.

The Government fully recognise the need to build on the progress which has already been made. They are committed to increasing the protection of habitats, for example, by accelerating the programme for the survey and declaration of areas of special scientific interest and to the preservation of scientific beauty by reviewing of areas of outstanding natural beauty. Secondly, we have undertaken to conserve the man-made heritage by completing the survey of all historic monuments by 1995 and the listing of all pre-1960 buildings of architectural and historic interest by 1994. Thirdly, we will continue to improve pollution control by greatly extending the water quality monitoring of all main rivers and estuaries and by enhancing sewage treatment. The Government will encourage the public to be more aware of Northern Ireland's heritage and emphasise the fact that the individual has a significant contribution to make to a good environment.

The Government have already taken action, or are planning, to meet all but one of the Committee's recommendations. However, we have concluded that we would not be justified in accepting the recommendation that an independent environmental agency should be established.

Firstly, the creation of an independent agency would conflict with the recommendations in the Balfour report. Secondly, decisions already taken, or planned, will resolve the problems which underlie the Committee's recommendation. The establishment of a Government-owned company to take over responsibility for water and sewerage services will separate these services from the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland. The Department will retain the regulatory functions. This division of responsibility will eliminate the "poacher-gamekeeper" factor in relation to water pollution control.

In addition, resources are being increased; the status of conservation and other environmental policies has been enhanced by the creation of a directorate whose head is a member of the DOE(NI) top management team; and the Government are committed to assuring the public that environmental factors will be a vital part of decision making.

In the recent White Paper "This Common Inheritance", the Government confirmed their undertaking to protect Northern Ireland's environment and to bequeath to future generations an unspoiled countryside with clean air and unpolluted rivers and seas. In responding to the Committee's report, we reaffirm our commitment to implement positive environmental policies which will safeguard the natural and man-made heritage in Northern Ireland.

HEALTH

Grandparents

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department is issuing to local authorities in connection with the Children Act 1989; and whether this guidance will include any details on grandparents' access to their grandchildren.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of documents have already been issued to local authorities including "An Introduction to the Children Act", a training curriculum produced by the London boroughs training committee, and "The Care of Children—Principles and Practice in Regulations and Guidance", copies of which are available in the Library.

Earlier this month over 20,000 copies of the first volume of guidance and regulations, on court orders, were distributed free of charge. Some 16,000 free copies were sent to directors of social services, and copies were also sent to chief education officers and chief executives. Volume 2 "Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children" was launched last week and will be distributed shortly; copies of both volumes are available in the Library. Volume 3 on family placements is being prepared and will be launched next month, and further volumes will follow, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Volume 1 includes guidance on the new section 8 contact orders, which are available in private law proceedings and for which grandparents may apply provided that they have first obtained leave of court to do so. This volume also contains guidance on the new provisions as to contact with children who are the subject of a care order.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes to grandparents' access to their grandchildren will arise from the implementation of the Children Act 1989 on 14 October.

Mr. Dorrell: The Children Act 1989 makes new provisions regarding contact with children who are the subject of a care order. The Act provides that any person who has obtained the leave of the court to do so may apply for an order determining the contact which is to be allowed between the child and that person.

It is anticipated that this provision will enable people with whom the child has previously had a close relationship but who are not automatically entitled to reasonable contact with the child—such as, in many cases, grandparents—to keep in touch with that child while he is in the care of the local authority. If the grandparent was the beneficiary of a residence order made under section 8 of the Act immediately prior to the care order being made, he will be one of those automatically entitled to reasonable contact.

Where a child is being looked after by a local authority on a voluntary basis, contact is a matter for agreement between parents, foster parents and the authority. The authority will have a duty to promote reasonable contact between the child and his relatives—including a grandparent—where this is consistent with the child's welfare.

In addition, the Act makes changes to the private law. It introduces a range of orders under section 8 which will be available to the court in private law proceedings. One of these, the contact order, requires the person with whom a child is living to allow the child to visit or stay with the person named in the order, and for that person and the child to have contact with each other. Anyone who has the leave of the court to do so may apply for a contact order.

Where grandparents have maintained a close relationship with the child, obtaining the permission of the court is unlikely to be much more than a formality.

For a limited number of cases, grandparents still have the right to apply for a section 8 contact order without first obtaining the court's leave. Broadly, these are where the child has lived with the grandparents for three years or more, or the grandparent has the consent of the person in whose favour there is a residence order in force—or the local authority where the child is in care—or, in any other case, the consent of those having parental responsibility for the child.

Health Authorities (Administration)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new administrative posts have been created by English health authorities since 1 January 1990; what the reason for these new posts are; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Chiropody

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any new proposals for the recognition of the chiropody profession based on a recognised course of qualification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Chiropody courses that lead to state registration are those recognised and approved by the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine. There are no plans to change that arrangement.

Child Employment

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking in order to assess the effectiveness of regulations governing child employment; and if he has any plans to amend existing legislation.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to assess the effectiveness of regulations governing child employment; and if he has any plans to seek to amend existing legislation.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the report of the national child employment study on "Children at Work in the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) on 25 March.

Patents (Chemical Substances)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give the remaining patent life for each new chemical entity and new active substance licensed and marketed in each of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989-90, respectively;

(2) how many products licensed in each of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989-90 had no effective patent life remaining at the point of marketing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not our practice to give information on the commercial position of the pharmaceutical companies covered by the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Health Service, Kuwait

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what help he is giving to the Kuwaiti Minister of Public Health to rebuild their health service.

Mr. Dorrell: I wrote to Dr. al Fouzan, Kuwait's Minister of Public Health, soon after the liberation of Kuwait offering our full support for the provision of emergency health services. I also commended to him, for the longer term, the services of a British health care-industry consortium, led by John Laing International. Through links with the Association of British Healthcare Industries, the consortium has access to providers of a wide range of British goods and services, including NHS expertise through NHS Overseas Enterprises. The consortium is now actively collaborating with the Kuwaiti Health Ministry to assess that country's needs.

Hospitals

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has given to an application from the North Western regional health authority for a grant towards the cost of the approved move of the department of psychiatry for the deaf from Whittingham hospital, Preston, to Manchester; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: On the advice of the supra-regional services advisory group, we are making available in 1991-92 bridging finance to assist with the proposed move of the department of psychiatry for the deaf from Whittingham hospital to Prestwich. The loan would be repayable on the sale of property or land on the Whittingham site.

The initial response of North Western regional health authority has been to decline the offer of bridging finance. The timing and funding of the relocation of the service is ultimately a matter for the health authority.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on the future of the Vale of Catmose hospital, Oakham, following the visit last summer by the hon. Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), Under-Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Dorrell: Leicestershire health authority approved the closure of Catmose Vale hospital on 8 February 1989.

The closure of Catmose Vale is part of the district's overall strategy for hospital services. A full public consultation exercise was carried out and the Leicestershire community health council agreed the closure. I understand the hospital will not close until facilities to reprovide services are complete at Rutland memorial hospital.

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many gynaecology beds will be available for (a) in-patients and (b) day care patients in Sharoe Green hospital on (i) 1 April 1991, (ii) 31 December 1991 and (iii) 1 April 1992; what percentage these are of beds available as at 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. W. I. Woolley, the chairman of Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority, for details.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of his Ministers has been given responsibility for energy use by his Department; and what is his or her brief regarding energy efficiency.

Mr. Jack: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Lord Henley, has been given responsibility for energy use. His brief is to maximise energy efficiency in the Department's buildings and to take opportunities to assist in promoting energy efficiency awareness among our staff and clients.

I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 28 January 1991 at column 434.

Child Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, on the same basis as his reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), 7 June 1988, Official Report, columns 521-22, the total amount of child benefit, together with the number of families and children in respect of which it is paid, and the percentage which each figure represents for the income bands (a) under £5,000, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £25,000, (f) £25,000 to £50,000, (g) £50,000 to £100,000 and (h) £100,000 and over.

Mr. Jack: Information about incomes of families receiving child benefit is not routinely collected. The following estimates of the gross incomes of recipient families in 1991-92 are therefore made on the basis of sample survey data which are subject to normal sampling and response variation.

Band of gross income	Families receiving child benefit		Number of children		Child benefit expenditure
	000s	per cent.	000s	per cent.	£ million	per cent.
Under £5,000	220	(3·2)	260	(2·1)	110	(2·2)
£5,000 to £10,000	1,410	(20·7)	2,610	(21·2)	1,060	(21·2)
£10,000 to £15,000	1,080	(15·8)	2,070	(16·8)	840	(16·8)
£15,000 to £20,000	1,270	(18·6)	2,330	(18·9)	950	(18·9)
£20,000 to £25,000	990	(14·5)	1,820	(14·8)	740	(14·7)
£25,000 to £50,000	1,550	(22·7)	2,700	(21·9)	1,100	(22·0)
Above £50,000	300	(4·4)	520	(4·3)	210	(4·3)
	6,810	(100·0)	12,310	(100·0)	5,010	(100·0)

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the 1986, 1987, 1988 family expenditure survey, supplemented by the survey of personal incomes, and updated to 1991-92 levels of earnings and benefit rates excluding proposed changes to child benefit announced in the Budget.
2. Income is measured on a gross basis and is the family's total income from all sources.
3. Estimates take no account of any failure to claim income-related benefits.
4. No detailed breakdown is possible for an income band above £50,000 because of sample sizes.
5. All figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000.
6. Figures may not sum due to rounding.

Benefit Arrears

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) for each social security office within Strathclyde region, the number of awards of supplementary benefit since April 1987, where regulation 72 of the adjudication regulations has operated to make the arrears payable to the claimant and (b) the number of these cases involving payment of arrears prior to November 1980.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Part-time Students

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy on paying benefit to part-time students who have courses to take, free of charge, but can obtain no grant or charitable funding.

Miss Widdecombe: Unemployed part-time students can receive income support provided they are prepared to terminate the course if a job vacancy arises, and they meet the basic conditions of entitlement to benefit. That is, for a fit person of working age, to be available for and actively seeking employment.

Local Offices

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy toward the provision of answerphones for local offices for use after hours; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Local offices can, at their discretion, use answerphones after hours to receive and impart information. Currently just under half do so.

State Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in which areas his Department has employed the services of market researchers to canvass pensioners over their preferred method for receiving payment of their state pension;

(2) if his Department employs the services of market researchers to canvass pensioners over their preferred method for receiving payment of their state pensions in (a) urban areas and (b) rural areas.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has recently employed market researchers to conduct a survey of preferred methods for receiving payment of state benefits. It was conducted amongst a nationally representative sample of pensioners, people coming up to retirement and people receiving child benefit.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the payment of state pensions through post offices and sub-post offices.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received no recent representations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy on payment methods of state pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's policy is to provide state retirement pensioners with the option of payment either by order book encashable at a post office or by automated credit transfer direct to a bank or building society account.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance his Department has issued to pensioners who receive a state pension about methods of receiving that benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about different methods of receiving retirement pension is contained in the pension claim form. In addition, in 1988, personal letters were sent to state retirement pensioners reminding them of the facility to receive their pension by automated credit transfer to a bank or building society account.

Benefit Appeals, Scotland

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of appeals heard and decided by tribunals concerning (a) income support, (b) mobility allowance, (c) attendance allowance, (d) injury and disablement benefit, (e) invalidity benefit and (f) non-income-related benefits in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland in the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and in the current year.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available statistics relating to social security appeal tribunals are for the quarter ending 31 March 1990. National administrative statistics for appeal tribunals are not available for areas smaller than a social security region. The relevant information for Scotland is in the table.

Total number of social security appeals heard and decided: Scotland

Social Fund

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many crisis loans were claimed and awarded by the Coventry East and West Department of Social Security offices last year.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is available in the Library.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the last year who have claimed a crisis loan from the social fund at the Coventry East office of the Department of Social Security as the only means by which serious damage or serious risk to their health or safety may be prevented have been refused a loan because, in the opinion of the social fund officer, they could not afford to repay it; what is the number for the Coventry West office; and what percentage of all applications for crisis loans are refused for this reason at each office.

Mr. Scott: The table shows the number of crisis loan applications received together with the number of crisis loan refusals because of perceived inability to repay for the period 1 April 1990 to the end of February 1991.

	Applications received April 1990 to February 1991	Number of refusals due to perceived inability to repay	Percentage of refusals due to perceived inability to repay
Coventry East	3,633	83	2·29
Coventry West	1,430	4	0·28

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in the last year who have attempted to claim a crisis loan from the social fund at the Coventry East Department of Social Security office as the only means by which serious damage or serious risk to their health or safety may be prevented have not been assessed on the day they have claimed but have been told to return the following day; and what are the figures for the Coventry West office;

(2) how many people in the last year have been awarded a crisis loan from the social fund at the Department of Social Security Coventry East office as the only means by which serious risk to their health or safety may be prevented and have been awarded a loan but told it would be posted to them instead of being paid to them on the day they were awarded it; and what are the figures for the Coventry West office.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Disabled Drivers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to the 1991 Budget statement, whether he will make a statement about the measures designed to help disabled drivers.

Mr. Scott: There are two measures arising from the Chancellor's Budget statement which will be of particular help to disabled drivers. The first is an extension in relief from car tax to cover vehicles leased to disabled drivers who are unable to complete the three-year leasing agreement. The second is to increase to £40 the annual petrol tax allowance paid to those disabled drivers who still have a vehicle provided through the invalid vehicle scheme. This represents a 300 per cent. increase in the existing allowance. I am especially pleased to welcome these modest, but worthwhile concessions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total of moneys received from the European Economic Community, in connection with agricultural support, subsidies or intervention payments of any kind, in each year since accession; and what has been the net cost of agricultural support, both national and Community, after allowing for the moneys received from the European Economic Community.

Mr. Curry: The total of European Community receipts in relation to agriculture, and total United Kingdom expenditure on agricultural grants and subsidies, for the period requested is shown in the table.

Year	Total receipts from the EC in relation to agriculture	Total Exchequer expenditure on agricultural grants and subsidies in the United Kingdom (EC and national) (£ million)
1973-74	80	390
1974-75	170	490

1989-90	1,230	1,260
1990-91	1,620	1,960

It would be misleading to net these receipts off the expenditure because the United Kingdom is a large net contributor to the Community budget and the receipts are in effect fully funded by the Exchequer.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the overall cost and (b) the net cost to the Exchequer of support to United Kingdom agriculture in each year from 1960 to 1990 in actual and real terms; and if he will show each set of figures as a percentage of the gross domestic product.

Mr. Curry: The gross cost to the Exchequer of all agricultural support for each year from 1960-61 to 1989-90 is given in the table. The cost is also shown in real terms. It would be misleading to show the cost net of EC receipts because the United Kingdom is a large net contributor to the Community budget and the receipts are in effect fully funded by the Exchequer. The table also shows the cost of support as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the amount spent on agricultural support in the United Kingdom under the common agricultural policy and by national grants and subsidies and (b) the expenditure on agricultural support as a percentage of the gross domestic product, for the years 1960-61, 1970-71 and each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

Cereal Substitutes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the principal cereal substitutes with the prices paid by the compounders imported into (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Economic Community.

Mr. Curry: Information on the average unit values of imports of the principal cereal substitutes during the period January to October 1990 is shown in the table. Comparisons may be affected by many factors including variations in date of importation, transport and handling costs, origin and specification of the product.

Average unit values[1] of principal cereal substitutes imported during January to October 1990 into:

[1]average unit value is the aggregate value of imports (cif) divided by quantity of imports. Import levies and duties (applicable only to brans and manioc) are not included in the valuations of imports direct from third countries but may be reflected in valuation of re-exports and transhipments.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further consideration he has given to the issue of sheep scab policy and public safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A review of sheep scab policy is taking place and an announcement will be made when this is completed.

All sheep dip products are licensed under the Medicines Act 1968 and are currently subject to a review to ensure the most up-to-date standards on safety—including safety to the environment. Any products which fail to meet these standards will be withdrawn from the market. The review will be completed by the end of the year.

Cereals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the degree of self-sufficiency in the United Kingdom, and European Economic Community, United States, Canada and the Cairns group countries of (a) wheat, (b) all cereals, (c) all cereals and cereal substitutes for the years 1979, 1985 and the latest year available.

Mr. Curry: Estimates of self-sufficiency in wheat and in cereals are shown in the table for the countries specified and a selection of Cairns group members. Comprehensive information on cereals substitutes is not readily available. Broad estimates for the European Community suggest a self-sufficiency in cereals and substitutes combined of about 103 per cent. in 1985-86 and 105 per cent. in 1989-90: corresponding estimates for the United Kingdom are 109 and 110 per cent. respectively and around 80 per cent. in 1979-80.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numbers of confirmed cases of BSE in the United Kingdom for each month since 1986 to the latest available date.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, for each year since 1987, how many BSE cows have been identified (a) on the farm, (b) at the livestock market, (c) at the slaughterhouse and (d) at other locations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: For 1987 the information is not available. For 1988 onwards the information for Great Britain is as follows:

EC Food Surpluses

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assist with the distribution of surplus EC food by meeting the costs of distribution by charitable organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Designated organisations will be entitled to reimbursement of the costs of each of the two stages of transport from store to processor and from processor to distribution point, up to certain maximum levels. Organisations participating in the distribution will also be able to reclaim justifiable and directly related administrative costs.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated value of EC surplus food to be distributed in the United Kingdom, in 1991; how this total will be divided between the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom has been allocated some £17·62 million worth of butter and beef for distribution during 1991. The geographical spread of this distribution will depend solely on the voluntary participation of charitable and other non-profit-making organisations. Applications for designation are currently being considered and I will make a statement as soon as a decision has been made.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to enable homeless and destitute people to receive a share of the surplus EC food to be distributed in the near future where no charitable organisation is available to organise the distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The distribution of produce to all eligible groups depends entirely on the voluntary participation of suitable organisations and I have no plans to change this arrangement.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many acres of farm land have been included in the set-aside scheme; what is the total sum paid to farmers to date; and what are the terms and conditions required of recipients to keep the said land in a reasonable condition.

Mr. Curry: Around 265,000 acres has been entered into the set-aside scheme in England in the first three years. Payments are made one year in arrears. A total of £8 million was paid in respect of the first scheme year and a further £17·5 million has been allocated in respect of the second.

Details of the management obligations placed upon participants are included in the scheme literature, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Tobacco

Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps the Government are taking to persuade the Council of Ministers of the European Community to reduce the support to tobacco growing within the Community.

Mr. Curry: The Government have consistently campaigned for reductions in EC support levels for tobacco, and particularly for higher tar varieties. In the current annual price-fixing negotiations, the biggest price cuts proposed by the Commission are for tobacco. The proposals would cut prices by an average of 10 per cent. with a range of 4 to 17 per cent. depending on variety, with the biggest cuts falling on higher tar varieties. The Government fully support these proposals.

The EC tobacco regime is to be completely reviewed later this year. The Government's object will be to secure the most radical reform negotiable.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of man hours spent on (a) salmonella and (b) BSE at each of the veterinary investigation centres in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The table lists the number of man hours of veterinary and scientific staff time in each of the veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales for the period 1 April to 31 December 1990.

VI centre	Salmonella man hours	BSE man hours
Aberystwyth	1,006	579
Bangor	1,259	641
Bristol	3,379	708

VI centre	Salmonella man hours	BSE man hours
Cambridge	3,056	2,764
Carmarthen	953	1,297
Lincoln	2,917	630
Newcastle	1,686	1,822
Norwich	5,936	592
Penrith	614	751
Preston	4,632	1,504
Reading	1,952	1,440
Shrewsbury	2,287	2,368
Starcross	1,779	1,333
Sutton Bonington	2,950	2,354
Truro	724	1,707
Thirsk	2,315	1,773
Worcester	2 264	2,528
Winchester	1,164	555
Wye	1,875	1,367

It should be noted that since the veterinary investigation service is managed and operated on a national basis, certain activities within both the salmonella and BSE columns do not reflect activity arising locally —for example, all examinations of processed animal protein for salmonella under the relevant orders are rationalised in one centre and the final histopathological diagnosis of BSE is spread over a number of centres to ensure as rapid a diagnosis as possible.

It should also be noted that the veterinary field service and not the veterinary investigation service is responsible for the field activities in relation to BSE and for certain field activities in relation to salmonella under the Zoonoses Order, the Poultry Laying Flocks and the Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries Order and the Processed Animal Protein Orders.

Veterinary Laboratory, Lincoln

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed closure of the veterinary laboratory at Lincoln on the efficiency of veterinary inspection in that area.

Mr. Maclean: In carrying out the review of the veterinary investigation service the review team carried out a full assessment of the impact of the closure of the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre on not only the Department's responsibilities in relation to statutory obligations, disease surveillance, public health and food safety matters, but on the maintenance of an effective and viable service to the local livestock industry. Final decisions were taken only after a very detailed consideration of the facts.

Responsibility for the work carried out at Lincoln is being transferred to the Sutton Bonington centre where additional accommodation, veterinary and scientific staff and increased investment in new technology are being provided. The quality control unit which operates on a national basis and is currently located at Lincoln is being relocated in new purpose-built accommodation at another centre.

As I indicated in my announcement of the outcome of the review, I am confident that the implementation of the recommendations of the review team will result in significant improvements in the quality, efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the service provided. The veterinary investigation service will be well equipped not only to meet our national needs over the years ahead but to continue to provide an efficient service to Lincolnshire.

EC Slaughterhouse Regulations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about derogations to EC slaughterhouse regulations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: At present, all slaughterhouses wishing to export to other member states must comply in full with EC slaughterhouse regulations; there are no derogations.

However, the European Commission's single market proposals covering this sector include provision for (i) temporary derogations for businesses which will be unable to comply with the proposed rules before the end of 1992; and (ii) permanent derogations from the structural rules for small businesses. The precise nature and scope of these derogations remain to be resolved in the course of negotiations in Brussels.

The Government fully support the proposal to introduce a single hygiene standard in the meat sector and consider that derogations should be available only where there is a genuine need for them. They should not be used as a means of delaying achievement of the single standard.

Seafish Committees

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to strengthen the powers of seafish committees to enable them to develop byelaws regulating the use of monofilament fixed gill nets; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Under the terms of the Sea Fisheries Regulations Act 1966, sea fisheries committees already have powers to regulate netting within their areas of jurisdiction.

Fishing Industry

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Fisheries Ministers have now completed their consultations with the United Kingdom fishing industry on the introduction of a 90 mm square mesh panel and related measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As foreshadowed in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) on 14 January, Fisheries Ministers have now consulted the fishing industry about the unilateral introduction for United Kingdom fishing vessels of 90 mm square mesh panels in the North sea and west of Scotland demersal fisheries. The industry as a whole has acknowledged the need for improved conservation measures, but has drawn attention to various problems which the proposed measure would cause. While appreciating these difficulties, we have decided that, in the long-term interests of the industry itself, we do need to introduce the new requirement from 1 July. From this date, with the exception of beam trawlers, United Kingdom vessels fishing in the North sea and the west of Scotland north of 56 deg north and using nets of between 90 mm and 100 mm mesh size inclusive will be required to use a 90 mm square mesh panel of a specified size in either the cod end or extension piece. The cod end will also have to meet certain requirements on construction; and the use of topside chafers and lifting bags will be prohibited. However, taking account of the points which the industry has raised the specific requirement to use a 90 mm square mesh panel will, initially at least, not apply to vessels whose maximum engine power does not exceed 298 kW—400 horse power: this derogation will not be available to vessels working as pairs if their combined engine power exceeds 298 kW. By 31 March next year we will review the arrangements in the light of experience and any developments, for example, in relation to EC technical conservation measures.

We also sought industry views on the desirability of including square mesh panels in nephrops nets in order to reduce whitefish by catches. In the light of industry comments, we will introduce from 1 July a requirement that in areas IV and VI nets with a mesh size from 70mm to under 90mm, or in the case of area VI south of 56 deg north under 80mm, should include 80mm square mesh panels except in the case of beam trawlers. In the Irish sea, area VIIa, where different mesh size regulations apply, all nets of between 70mm and 85mm inclusive, including both nephrops and whitefish nets, should include a square mesh panel of 75mm, again with the exception of beam trawlers.

Given the United Kingdom's major share of the North sea and west of Scotland cod and haddock stocks and the importance to our fleet of the Irish sea fisheries, we have a clear interest to improve the conservation of these stocks. I believe that these unilateral measures will not only make an important contribution to protecting juvenile whitefish, but should also make clear to the Community our determination to achieve improvements to technical conservation measures which are essential to conserving stocks. We will be laying the necessary statutory instrument before Parliament after the Easter recess.

Potatoes

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has determined the market support prices for potatoes to apply in Great Britain for the 1991-92 crop year beginning 1 July.

Mr. Gummer: Agriculture Ministers have consulted the farmers' unions about the market support arrangements to apply for the 1991-92 crop year. Ministers have decided that the guaranteed price should remain £53 per tonne. They have, as in 1990-91, authorised the board to decide whether it wishes to support the market by entering into pre-season contracts with producers or by intervening directly, provided that total purchases do not exceed 500,000 tonnes. The target area for potato plantings by registered producers in Great Britain was fixed last August at 154,000 hectares.

WALES

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which areas in Wales have benefited as a result of the business rate revaluation.

Mr. David Hunt: The non-domestic rate revaluation factor for each district in Wales is shown in the following table:

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh businesses will have to pay the maximum increase under the uniform business rate in 1991-92; what percentage will see their rates bills fall in real terms; and what percentage will see no increase in real terms.

Mr. David Hunt: The effect of transitional arrangements on non-domestic rate bills in Wales for 1991-92 is that 65 per cent. of businesses will have a reduction or no change in real terms.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what transitional protection he has arranged following the introduction of the uniform business rate in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: In moving to the new business rating system, the contribution made by businesses towards local government spending in Wales has been maintained at the same level in real terms as in 1989-90. We recognised that some businesses would need time to adjust to the rate increases they faced following the revaluation of non-domestic property and the introduction of the uniform business rate. We therefore introduced transitional arrangements under which no occupier should have a rate increase of more than 20 per cent. in real terms in any year. For businesses which have rateable values below £10,000, the maximum increase should be 15 per cent. in real terms.

Community Charge

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage and number of Welsh mixed hereditament businesses will benefit as a result of the initial review of the community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: Following our initial review of the community charge and the associated consultation document entitled "The Standard Community Charge and other matters", a number of changes affecting composite hereditaments were brought into force by means of the Non-Domestic Rating (Transitional Period) (Amendment and Further Revision) Regulations 1990 (SI 1990/2329). This amended the transitional arrangements for non-domestic rates to reduce the maximum annual increase in rate bills from 15 to 10 per cent. in real terms for composite hereditaments with rateable values below £10,000. The chief valuer estimates that between 85 and 90 per cent. of mixed hereditaments in Wales will benefit.

Audiological Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the area health authorities in Wales which have a comprehensive audiological service for babies and young children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available centrally. It is for health authorities to determine the nature and level of audiological services provided within their districts, although I understand that the Welsh Medical Committee is currently reviewing the position in Wales for children who suffer from hearing loss.

Nurses' Grading

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh nursing clinical grading appeals are currently waiting to be heard at (a) district level, (b) national level and (c) United Kingdom level; and how many appeals have already been completed at each of those levels.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested in relation to nurse clinical grading appeals in Wales is as follows:

Appeal level	Numbers of appeals
	Completed	Outstanding
District Health Authority	3,725	1,733
Wales Appeals Committee	151	1,188
GB—Negotiating Council	1	80

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects nursing clinical grading appeals will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Many more appeals are expected to come through at the all-Wales and negotiating council levels and, in view of the cumbersome and resource-intensive procedures, it is quite impossible to predict when the appeals process will be fully completed. At employing authority level, appeals have been completed in four of the nine districts in Wales. At the all-Wales level, agreement has recently been reached between the Department, management and staff sides on ways and means of speeding up the mechanics and I expect speedier progress to be made.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the total number of nursing clinical grading appeals already heard at national level, stating how many resulted in an appeal being upheld, rejected or a failure to agree.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Of the 151 appeals heard to date by the Welsh appeals committee the results have been as follows:

	Number
Upheld	34
Unsuccessful	4
Failure to agree	113

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average cost associated with a single nursing clinical grading appeal hearing at (a) district level, (b) national level and (c) United Kingdom level.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available.

Seven-year-olds (Testing)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultation he has had with teachers concerning the publication of national curriculum test results for seven-year-olds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the publication of national curriculum test results for seven-year-olds in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the press announcement which I made on this issue on 20 February, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Primary schools will be required to inform parents of the individual results of the assessment of their children at the end of key stage 1—seven-year-old pupils. There will be no statutory requirement for schools to publish aggregate results more widely although they are encouraged to do so.

Future requirements for the collection and publication of data arising from the national curriculum assessment arrangements are still being determined. I will consult with the Curriculum Council for Wales, the School Examinations and Assessment Council, local education authorities and others on any proposed regulations.

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the response to his consultation paper on the reform of agricultural tenancy law in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Consultees have until 13 May 1991 to put forward their views. Responses will then be considered carefully by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and me before any decisions are made.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any further changes to his Department's 1990-91 cash limits.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. The cash limit for Welsh Office/local authorities' capital is to be reduced by £14,274,000 from £367,588,000 to £353,314,000. At the same time, the cash limit for Welsh Office/Housing for Wales will increase by £14,274,000 from £92,183,000 to £106,457,000. These variations arise from the decisions of local authorities to transfer resources to Housing for Wales to enable housing associations to provide additional housing units.

These changes do not affect forecast outturn for the planning total published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

SCOTLAND

Fishing

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what directions have been given to fisheries officers with regard to any flexibility which might be permitted in the application of the eight-day tie-up rule, in circumstances where boats at sea are caught up in extreme weather conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fishery officers have simply been told that, as is always the case when enforcing fisheries, where there is an immediate safety hazard they should take this into account in administering the scheme. Particular examples might be where a vessel was forced to divert to another port because of bad weather or where bad weather meant that it was having to ride out a storm at sea and unable to make port at all. In such circumstances a fisherman should contact the relevant fishery office as soon as the problem becomes apparent.

Crime Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the numbers of children in age categories eight to 15 years and youths 16 to 20 years who have been convicted of offences in each of the last five years in (a) Dundee, (b) Tayside and (c) Scotland.

Motorways

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway there are in Scotland; and what proportion of these are lit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Of a total of 161·5 miles of motorway in Scotland, 27 miles are lit, which equates to approximately 17 per cent.

Miscarriages of Justice

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the effectiveness of the procedure for reviewing alleged miscarriages of justice.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Alleged miscarriages of justice in Scotland may be reviewed by the High Court of Justiciary either when an appeal is made from the court of first instance or when a case is referred to the High Court by the Secretary of State in terms of section 263(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975. In circumstances where such a reference might be inappropriate, the Secretary of State may make a recommendation to Her Majesty concerning exercise of the Royal Prerogative of Mercy.

Any convicted person may petition the Secretary of State seeking review of his case. The validity, weight and significance of any fresh evidence or any other issue raised is carefully assessed in every case and, where appropriate, consideration given to a reference to the High Court of Justiciary. Between 1984 and 1990 on average 50 persons petitioned the Secretary of State in each year; and three cases were referred to the High Court, the conviction being quashed in each case.

Food Costs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of money allocated for food per prisoner per day in each prison in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cost of food for prisoners is determined by the weekly ration sheet based on an approved dietary scale. On that basis, the average daily food cost per prisoner in Scotland is £1·19.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of money allocated for food per hospital patient per day in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available in the form requested.

It is for each health board to decide on how much of its total revenue allocation it will spend on catering services, including food provisions. In arriving at that decision the board will have regard to the advice of dietitians on the dietary requirements of patients in the different care groups.

Agriculture

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) ewes and shearlings, (b) dairy cows and (c) breeding sows and gilts there were in Scotland (i) in each of the five years from 1986 to 1990 and (ii) on average for the years between 1979 and 1981, inclusive.

Green House Programme

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a parallel programme to the Department of the Environment's green house programme for local authority housing will be implemented in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 February 1991]: I was pleased to announce on Monday 25 March that an additional £2 million is being made available in 1991-92 to promote an energy efficiency and savings initiative in the six local authorities with the largest number of houses suffering condensation and dampness.

The main aims of the programme will be to promote the wider application of energy efficiency measures to provide affordable heating for tenants, as well as to reduce harmful emissions to the atmosphere through energy savings. My intention under this initiative is that resources will be provided to support local authority projects which best meet these aims.

The Scottish Office will shortly be exploring with Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee, Aberdeen, Falkirk and Motherwell district councils the uses to which these extra resources can best be put. I shall announce the distribution of these new resources as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Dubai Defence Exhibition

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 28 February, column 615, he will set out (a) the purpose of his departmental representation at the Dubai 91 aerospace and defence exhibition, (b) the projected cost and expected benefits of departmental representation and (c) the number and grades of departmental personnel planned to attend.

Mr. Alan Clark: Representatives from my Department will provide marketing support to United Kingdom exhibitors, in accordance with Government policy. The direct costs of this representation will be approximately £18,000. The number and grade of staff attending have yet to be decided.

Education and Training

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent initiatives by his Department in support of higher-level education and training.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has decided to create a chair in defence engineering. Following a competition among a number of universities, we have awarded the chair on the basis of a joint bid by University college London (UCL) and King's college London.

The chair will have three objectives: to establish a centre of excellence in engineering and procurement matters relating to defence; to raise further the public profile and professional standards of civilian engineers in the Ministry of Defence; and to provide further education and training for MOD engineers.

The chair will conduct research in engineering issues of particular interest to the MOD, and intends to provide, from October 1991, a one-year MSc course in the management of defence engineering. The MOD will send about 10 of its brightest young civilian engineers to attend the course, and it is hoped that additional students will be attracted from the United Kingdom and overseas. We also propose to take the opportunity to rationalise in due course the provision of training in naval architecture, which we have sponsored for many years at UCL, by placing this under the aegis of the new chair.

Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about agency status for the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The chemical defence establishment at Porton Down will become a defence support agency on 1 April. The director of the establishment, Dr. G. S. Pearson, has been appointed the chief executive and will be known as the director general.

We are taking the opportunity of this new status to change the name of the establishment to the "chemical and biological defence establishment"—CBDE—to reflect more accurately its existing role in both chemical and biological defence.

There will be no change in the role of the agency. Its aim will continue to be to ensure that the British armed forces are protected from any chemical and biological warfare agents that might be used against them by an aggressor. The establishment's expertise is used to support the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments. In particular, the establishment provides scientific and technical advice in support of the arms control negotiations in the field of chemical and biological weapons. It will continue to contribute to the negotiations at the conference on disarmament in Geneva aimed at achieving a comprehensive, effectively verifiable and global ban on chemical weapons. Research at CBDE also helps to improve health and safety in a wide range of civil activities—for example, the hazards from accidents in the chemical industry, detection of atmospheric pollutants, respiratory protection against toxic fumes and fire hazards and medical countermeasures applicable to the pesticide industry.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said to the House on 18 October 1989, at columns 154-55, defence support agencies will be run on "next steps" lines but will remain within the defence chain of command. Such agencies are established within the MOD's new management strategy, under which we aim to secure better value for money for the defence budget through closer alignment of financial accountability with line management responsibilities, and by a system of performance reviews.

The establishment of the chemical and biological defence establishment as a defence support agency is another significant landmark in this process. The professional and internationally recognised standards which have contributed to the success of work at Porton Down for the last 75 years will continue to be upheld. The greater freedom and flexibility now granted to the director general will provide him with new opportunities to enhance the establishment's successful role.

The move to agency status will build upon CBDE's international reputation as a centre of scientific excellence by further improving the efficiency, effectiveness and quality of the work carried out by the establishment. In order to bring about these improvements, the director general has accordingly been set a range of challenging key performance targets.

These are as follows:

(a) in 1991-92, to achieve, within agreed time scales, 80 per cent. of the chemical biological defence programme milestones required by the service chiefs of staff, and to seek progressive improvements in performance in future years;

(b) in 1991-92, to achieve, to agreed cost, 80 per cent. of the chemical biological defence programme milestones required by the service chiefs of staff, and to seek progressive improvements in performance in future years;

(c) to sustain the CBDE research programme and the capability of CBDE to respond effectively to operational emergencies by maintaining scientific and technical staff at least to the current proportion of 65 per cent. of the total planned manpower;

(d) to increase the overall efficiency of CBDE by more than 1.5 per cent. over the financial year 1991-92;

(e) to reduce progressively the full unit cost per scientific productive hour initially by 2 per cent. in the year ending 31 March 1993;

(f) to continue and extend the programme of efficiency reviews and where appropriate market testing of support services and implement a programme for further studies so that more than 60 per cent. by cost of the support area has been reviewed by 31 March 1992 and thereby identify scope for programme cost reductions in future years;

(g) to review and improve the existing resource allocation and cost attribution system by 31 March 1992 in order to identify and reduce unit costs;

(h) to develop the capacity of CBDE for corporate and business planning, and to produce revised plans and targets by 1 April 1992; and

(j) to refine the customer/supplier objective setting procedures which set targets for timeliness and cost and to incorporate a mechanism for implementation in 1992 which will permit the customer to assess the quality of output in terms of research and of scientific and technical advice.

I wish the director general and his staff every success in the coming years.

Non-nuclear Research Establishments

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress made towards establishing the defence non-nuclear research establishments as an executive agency.

Mr. Tom King: I am pleased to announce the creation of the Defence Research Agency which will be vested as an executive agency on 1 April this year. The agency will comprise the four main non-nuclear research establishments, the Admiralty Research Establishment, the Royal Aerospace Establishment, the Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment, and the Royal Signals and Radar Establishment.

The Defence Research Agency—DRA—will provide the expert scientific and technical services required of it primarily by the MOD but also other Government Departments, in a way which is cost-effective and where necessary impartial; in support of this, the DRA is also encouraged to provide services to non-Exchequer customers. The DRA will continue to represent Her Majesty's Government in its participation in international and collaborative activities.

An open competition has been mounted to select and appoint a chief executive for the next three to five years; the outcome should be determined by early May. Meanwhile Mr. Nigel Hughes, now chief executive (designate), will act as chief executive from 1 April.

The chief executive will have the financial and personnel powers which are set out in the agency's published framework document, copies of which will be placed in the Library shortly. Where hon. or right hon. Members have queries on matters relating to the operation of the Defence Research Agency I hope they will write in the first instance to the chief executive. I will continue to deal with questions of policy.

I will be setting the agency a range of targets to ensure that it delivers progressive improvements in the quality and efficiency of the services it supplies to its customers. The initial targets I have set for the Defence Research Agency during the period 1991-96 are:

(a) to achieve efficiency improvements of an average of 2¼ per cent. per annum over the next five years, by delivering a saving of £10 million in 1991-92 and a reduction of an average of 2¼ per cent. per annum in terms of full cost per chargeable hour in the following four years;

(b) to develop in 1991-92 a programme for asset rationalisation against which targets will be set for the following years; to improve asset utilisation, defined as the ratio of turnover to average fixed assets, including those leased; and to reduce the total value of fixed assets employed in the business in accordance with the programme by a combination of rationalisation and reduced leasing;

(c) to keep within the budget agreed for the DRA;

(d) to complete 80 per cent. of orders and contracts due for completion during the review period and valued at more than £5 million, within budget, taking account of any negotiated changes, and to increase this proportion to 90 per cent. by the end of 1995-96;

(e) within orders and contracts, to achieve 50 per cent. of milestones within plus or minus one month, and increase this by 5 per cent. per annum over five years;

(f) to improve the perceived quality of service to customers, as indicated by annual customer satisfaction surveys;

(g) to enhance existing management information systems, and to develop and implement an internal output and performance measurement system by October 1991;

(h) to introduce a commercial accounting system by 1 October 1991, to train 70 per cent. of potential users of the system by the same date, and complete initial training of all staff who need to use it by 1 April 1992; and

(j) to introduce arrangements from 1 October 1991 to give MOD customers information on the cost and quality of work done for them by the DRA to support a tautened customer/supplier relationship and to prepare progressively for subsequent trading fund operation.

I wish the chief executive and his staff every success for the future in meeting their objectives of providing greater quality of service and better value for money.

Directorate General of Defence Accounts

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the establishment of the Directorate General of Defence Accounts as a defence support agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Directorate General of Defence Accounts—DGDA—is to become a defence support agency on 1 April 1991.

The chief executive will be the present incumbent, Mr. M. J. Dymond.

The DGDA's role is to provide accountancy services to the MOD. It pays bills, civilian salaries and wages, makes superannuation awards, recovers moneys due, maintains the central ledger, produces the appropriation account and provides accounting advice and data. Its role is crucial to the successful implementation of new management strategy for defence. The DGDA's systems will provide much of the financial information which is needed to run the new devolved management structures.

The DGDA provides a high-quality professional service. It will aim to achieve new standards of excellence in dealings between the agency and its customers. To this end, the chief executive has been set demanding targets covering all areas of performance.

Agency status will give the DGDA the freedoms and flexibilities it needs to perform its role more effectively and efficiently, providing continuous improvements in the quality of the service it offers to users.

The chief executive's targets for the early years are:

(a) to develop and agree service level agreements for each of the DGDA's functions and tasks with customers by 31 July 1991 and thereafter to meet agreed time, cost and quality of service criteria as laid down in individual service level agreements;

(b) to reduce the turnaround time of civilian travel claims from 15 to 10 working days by 31 March 1992;

(c) to introduce a two-weekly billing timetable for bills by the end of 1991-92;

(d) to reduce throughput errors in DGDA in the following areas:
—non-industrial pay to 3 per cent.; industrial pay by 1 per cent.; pensions to 2 per cent.; civilian travel claims to 2 per cent.; and bill payment by 2 per cent.

(e) to carry out agreed tasks to time, standard and within budget;

(f) to achieve a sustained improvement in overall efficiency reflected in the budgeted costs of the following indicators: cost per pay account, cost per travel claim, cost per bill, cost per receipt and cost per pensions award;

(g) to achieve efficiency improvements of at least £450,000 in 1991-92;

(h) to produce a saving in the overall defence budget of £450,000 by the introduction of revised selective checking procedures in the D Acs (Bills) area;

(j) to review existing internal management information systems and identify management requirements by 30 August 1991, and to develop and implement systems, including unit cost measurement, capable of measuring performance of the agency more effectively by 27 March 1992;

(k) to review the systems and resources required to carry out the agreed tasks and meet targets set for MOD HQ in "Options for Change", with the aim of reducing the net cost of the agency to the MOD and of minimising spare capacity where possible. Where spare capacity cannot be eliminated, to seek to utilise it by expanding the customer base in accordance with the business development strategy.

I wish the chief executive and his staff every success in their new status.

Territorial Army

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which items in a Territorial Army unit's budget for 1992 are to be included in cash terms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The items which may be included in a unit's budget in cash terms are pay, earnings-related national insurance contributions, training expenses allowance, bounty, travel costs and subsistence.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what man training day allocations are to be made to Territorial Army units in 1992 by category.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am unable to give the information requested as, due to the introduction of the new management strategy, man training day allocations are devolved to the chain of command and hence made unit by unit according to role and training need.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the principal units in the Territorial Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal units of the Territorial Army are:

2	Army Reconnaissance Regiments
3	Light Reconnaissance Regiments
2	Field Artillery Regiments
4	Air Defence Regiments
8	Engineer Regiments
41	Infantry Battalions
2	Special Air Service Regiments
1	Honourable Artillery Company
11	Royal Signal Regiments
12	Royal Corps Transport Regiments
10	General Hospital (RAMC)
3	Field Hospital (RAMC)
1	Evacuation Hospital (RAMC)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many drill halls the Territorial Army has, by region.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The regional deployment of Territorial Army centres is as follows:

Tavra Region	Number of Territorial Army centres
Highland	42
Lowland	38
North East	41
Yorkshire & Humberside	50
East Midlands	53
East Anglia	28
South East	33
Eastern Wessex	31
Western Wessex	36
North West	54
West Midlands	47
Northern Ireland	30
Wales	39
Greater London	57

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the hon. Member for Canterbury with the most recent report of the Territorial Army national employers liaison committee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the additional costs of a Territorial Army parachute battalion as against a non-parachute Territorial Army infantry battalion; and what are the principal items which incur these extra costs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Gulf War

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what attempts have been made since 27 February by the United Kingdom, the allied military coalition, or the United Nations to establish the nationalities of those people killed by allied attacks on road convoys at Mutla hill, Kuwait and Umm Qasr road on 26-27 February.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personal effects of bodies buried by British personnel have been passed to the International Committee of the Red Cross, in accordance with our obligations under the first Geneva convention. I understand that other members of the coalition followed the same practice.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British prisoners of war released by Iraq were physically abused while under Iraqi custody.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Indications from initial debriefing of British prisoners of war released by Iraq are that their treatment in captivity was varied, ranging from serious beatings at some sites, in breach of Iraq's obligations under the third Geneva convention, to relatively good conditions and medical attention at others.

Coldstream Guards

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the reason 20 selected recruits to the Coldstream Guards were advised that they could not join the regiment as planned in November 1990 and would have to wait until April 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: As a result of pressures on the defence budget, restrictions on enlistments to the Army have meant that some regiments, including the Coldstream Guards, have had to defer the entry date of prospective recruits.

Army Regiments

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army regiments that have spent up to their financial quota imposed by his Department are now funding recruits out of regimental funds until the start of the new financial year.

Mr. Alan Clark: No regiments are using their regimental funds to fund recruits.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Charter

11. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met Mrs. Papandreou to discuss the social charter.

Mr. Howard: I met Mrs. Papandreou on 14 January to discuss the Commission's social action programme and priorities for social affairs in the Community in 1991. I put to her some specific proposals for improving the procedures adopted by the Commission in the social affairs field which I am pleased to say she has now accepted.

Port of Goole (Accidents)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of recorded accidents which have taken place at the port of Goole in the course of the employment of dockers, stevedores and dock workers for each year since 1985.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the number of injuries to employees in services supporting water transport in Boothferry and Scunthorpe, the local authority areas covering the port of Goole, reported to the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 for the period requested:

Year (1 April to 31 March)	Fatal	Major	Over 3-day	Total
1986-87	—	1	2	3
1987-88	—	—	4	4
1988-89	—	1	7	8
1989-90	—	1	8	9

It is not possible to give separate injury statistics for dockers, stevedores and dock workers, as these are not individually identified within the reporting category. Nor can the number of separate accidents causing these injuries by identified.

Advertising

18. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his Department spent on advertising and promotional material in 1985-86 and what is the total budget for 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: The Department's expenditure on advertising and promotional material in 1985-86 was £17·1 million. The total budget for 1990-91 is £29 million.

Health and Safety Executive

20. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to increase the Government grant in aid of the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Estimates provide for grant in aid to the Health and Safety Commission in 1991-92 of £140 million; an increase of £20 million over the 1990-91 level. Full details of Health and Safety Commission and Executive plans for use of these resources will be published in the plan of work for 1991-92 and beyond in the spring.

Career Development Loans

21. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been made available under career development loans to individuals to assist them in training.

Mr. Howard: At the end of February 1991 the three participating banks had lent almost £40 million to more than 16,000 individuals.

Wakefield TEC

22. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the Wakefield TEC to discuss training provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I intend to meet the chairman of Wakefield TEC on 15 April to discuss a range of training and enterprise issues. Wakefield TEC has provided creative and imaginative plans. I am confident that these will substantially benefit the economy of the Wakefield area.

Employment Rehabilitation Service

23. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the work of the employment rehabilitation service.

Mr. Jackson: The employment rehabilitation service offers specialist assessment and rehabilitation to help people with disabilities get back to work or to enter training. It is already very successful. Plans for further improvements were announced in the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" and comments made on how to implement them most effectively are being carefully considered.

Government Training Schemes

24. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people under the age of 25 years secured full-time employment in 1990 as a result of Government-sponsored training schemes.

Mr. Jackson: Of those under 25 years, 63 per cent. of those leaving YT and 32 per cent. of those leaving ET went into full-time employment.

Unemployment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 21 March.

Mr. Jackson: On the latest count date of 7 February 1991 there were 10,959 on the unadjusted basis.

ENERGY

Energy Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 26 February, column 448, when he expects the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1991" to be published.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is expected that the 1991 edition of the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics" will be published at the end of July, as in previous years. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Gas-fired Boilers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to bring forward proposals to implement the EC directive on the energy efficiency of gas-fired domestic boilers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The form and content of this draft directive are still under discussion and it is too early to say when a draft will be ready to be considered for adoption by the Community. If it is adopted, subsequent implementation in this country will proceed within the timetable which will be set in the directive.

Coal

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals to amend the Coal Industry Act to put an obligation on British Coal to protect existing coal reserves.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the Coal Industry Acts 1946 to 1990, the British Coal Corporation has a statutory duty to secure the efficient development of the coal industry. The Government have announced their intention to privatise the coal industry after the next election, which will involve a change to the existing legislation.

Rye House Power Station

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how long the Rye House power station in Hertfordshire has been decommissioned.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The decommissioning of the old Rye House power station was completed by the end of 1982.

Offshore Safety

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he has made in implementing the recommendation of the Cullen report into the Piper Alpha disaster that responsibility for the regulation of offshore safety should be transferred to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Wakeham: I announced on 12 November, Official Report, column 330, the Government's acceptance of all the recommendations for improving offshore safety made by Lord Cullen in his report on the Piper Alpha disaster. These included the establishment of a single regulatory body to deal with offshore safety which, on balance, he recommended should be part of the Health and Safety Executive. It follows that the Health and Safety Commission will be responsible for taking forward Lord Cullen's other recommendations. I also announced in November that ministerial responsibility for offshore safety matters in Great Britain would, with the approval of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, be transferred to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

I am pleased to announce that, following the completion of the necessary detailed preparatory work, and with the agreement of the Health and Safety Commission, the staff of the offshore safety division of the Department of Energy, together with certain staff from the Department of Transport, will, with effect from 1 April 1991, be transferred to the HSE. They will form the core of a new division, which will be considerably strengthened to enable it to continue to enforce the existing regime for the regulation of offshore safety and to carry forward the successful development and implementation of changes recommended by Lord Cullen.

It is clear that a significant increase in the resources available to the HSE will be necessary to enable it to carry out its new responsibilities. Agreement has been reached on this with the HSC and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, who will be assuming ministerial responsibility from the same date, will be seeking authority for the necessary additional resources by means of a supplementary estimate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Community Charge

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will bring forward proposals for ensuring that community charge non-payers are not recorded on the general register of county court judgments on debts.

The Attorney-General: The regulations that govern the operation of the Register of County Court Judgments do not at present provide for information about community charge non-payers to be recorded, since community charge is enforced through magistrates courts.

Female Circumcision

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General on how many cases relating to female circumcision the Director of Public Prosecutions has received papers since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No papers have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions in cases in which a prosecution under the Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985 has been sought.

Cases concerning female circumcision may also be prosecuted as offences of causing grievous bodily harm contrary to the Offences Against the Person Act 1861. Information on whether any papers have been referred seeking prosecutions under this Act in such circumstances is not, however, readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Record Office

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes have been made to the running costs limit for the Public Record Office.

The Attorney-General: The running cost limit for the Public Record Office will be decreased by £69,000 from £16,754,000 to £16,685,000 to compensate for a breach in the running cost limit in 1989-90. This follows the normal practice of reducing the limit for one financial year by the amount of any overspend in the previous year.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the year-on percentage change in the retail prices index (a) excluding the community charge and mortgage interest payments for each month since April 1989, (b) excluding rates and mortgage interest payments for each month between June 1987 and April 1989 and (c) excluding mortgage interest payments for each month since June 1987.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish tables for the financing of local authority expenditure in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom, in a form comparable to table 5.13 of Cm 1520, but analysing the financing of local authority expenditure as defined in table 5·6 rather than the financing of local authority expenditure on a national accounts basis.

Mr. Mellor: The table shows the financing of local authority expenditure as defined in table 5.6 of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement" —Cm 1520—for the United Kingdom.

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Grants in Aggregate External Finance	13,230	14,130	15,160	15,560	16,100
Other grants	6,570	7,200	7,510	7,380	9,200
Rates (net of all rebates)	13,860	15,720	17,140	19,130	20,780
Trading surpluses, interest and dividend	1,230	1,330	1,390	1,680	2,090

Borrowing from central government (PWLB)	5,750	5,720	4,090	4,940	2,260
from other sources	−4,080	−5,570	−2,740	−4,600	−940
Other receipts	−150	510	−600	−150	250
Total income	39,500	42,080	44,990	47,130	52,890

The footnotes in table 5.13 of Cm 1520 still apply except that "other grants" excludes the repayment of VAT and "other receipts" excludes the imputed income from non-trading capital.

Data are not held in a form which allows a disaggregation of the above table by territory, except at disproportionate cost.

Denationalisation

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of jobs (a) in total and (b) as full-time equivalent that have been subject to denationalisation since 1979-80.

Mr. Maude: At least 910,000 jobs in total—at least 885,000 full-time equivalent—have been transferred to the private sector due to privatisation since 1979-80.

Gross Domestic Product Deflators

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the derivation of the financial year gross domestic product market price deflators now used in Cm 1520, together with a similar derivation for the financial year gross domestic product market price deflator without adjustment for the effect of the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Mellor: The GDP market price deflator for past years is calculated from the ratio of data on cash and constant price figures for GDP at market prices. Figures for the current year and future years are Treasury forecasts. Details of the method used to adjust the GDP deflator series to remove the discontinuity associated with the abolition of domestic rates, are given in paragraphs 7 to 12 of appendix A of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm 1520. The unadjusted GDP deflator series consistent with the adjusted figures published in Cm 1520 is:

	Unadjusted GDP deflator (1989-90 = 100)

Balance of Payments

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in descending order of balance of payment performance (a) agriculture as a whole, (b) agriculture minus cereals, (c) the cereal sector, (d) coal, (e) steel, (f) electrical, (g) chemical and (h) invisibles.

Mr. Mellor: The balance of payments surplus on invisibles for 1990 is currently estimated at £5·1 billion. Visible trade information is not available for specific commodities on a balance of payments basis: the following table shows 1990 crude trade balances (1) for the nearest classes of goods on an overseas trade statistics basis.

£ billion

SITC[2]		Crude Balance[1]
5	Chemicals	+2·3
67	Iron and steel	+0·4

[3] There is no generally accepted definition of agriculture in the SITC. The figures used cover food and live animals, feed, beverages and other agricultural products (SITC Sections 0, 1 and 4; Division 22 and parts of Divisions 21, 26, 29, 51, 53, 55 and 59).

Finance Bill

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published.

Mr. Mellor: The Finance Bill will be published on Wednesday 17 April.

Civil Service Catering Organisation

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the recommendation of the Treasury working party which has looked into the options for the future of the Civil Service Catering Organisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 March 1991]: Following an assessment of prospects for the Civil Service Catering Organisation—CISCO—in a study announced on 4 April 1990, Official Report, columns 608-09, I have decided that CISCO should be reorganised with the aim of its transfer to the private sector.

Reorganisation will include developing CISCO's operations on more commercial lines and concentrating them upon its business activities. It will be for individual Departments and agencies to decide what catering facilities will be made available to staff. In consequence, certain administration-related work which CISCO has undertaken hitherto will pass elsewhere within government, some to Departments generally and some to the Treasury. The changes will give CISCO the opportunity to improve the value for money which its services offer both to its Government Department clients and to the individual customers of the staff restaurants which it runs and manages. Competitive tendering of catering contracts will continue, and the free choices made by CISCO's clients and customers will eventually determine whether it will be viable for operation in the private sector or whether the needs of Departments and individual customers will best be met by other catering contractors. I expect the management of this process of change to finish by the end of March 1993.

Consultations will take place with the Council of Civil Service Unions and the Joint Co-ordinating Committee for Government Industrial Establishments.

Community Charge

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) of 15 February, Official Report, column 624, if he will estimate the increase in the standard rate of income tax which would be required to yield the same revenue as his revised estimate of the yield of the community charge in 1991-92, following his Budget announcement on measures to reduce the amounts raised in community charge.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 25 March 1991]: Around 4p.

Inflation

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in inflation between 1979 and 1990 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the G7 as a whole, calculating United Kingdom inflation in terms of the underlying rate in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 March 1991]: There are a number of ways of estimating underlying inflation. As measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments and the community charge rates the 12-month rate fell from 12·5 per cent. in 1979 to 7·2 per cent. in 1990. Alternatively as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments the rate fell from 12·5 per cent. in 1979 to 8·1 per cent. in 1990.

The average 12-month increase in consumer prices for G7 countries in 1990 was 5 per cent. A comparable figure for 1979 is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Reading

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of books included in the recommended reading lists for children in level 3 which are presently in print.

Mr. Eggar: Of the 24 titles on the booklist for the level 3 reading test, 10 are currently in print, four more will be in print by the end of this week and the remaining 10 will be reprinted over the next few weeks. The titles were chosen on the assumption that every school would have at least one in stock. There is no need for schools to obtain a copy of every title on the list in order to carry out the reading tests.

National Association of Boys' Clubs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of HM inspectors' inspection of the National Association of Boys' Clubs carried out between September 1988 and June 1989.

Mr. Atkins: The approximate direct cost of the inspection was £15,000.

National Curriculum

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to promote the discussion of environmental problems, within the geography national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend laid earlier this week the order that contains the attainment targets and programmes of study for geography in the national curriculum. This includes a whole attainment target dealing with environmental geography. Environmental education is also a cross-curricular theme within the national curriculum and other subjects, notably science, will have their part to play in delivering this aspect of education.

Mandatory Awards

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to amend the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1990 for the current academic year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend is laying before the House today the Education (Mandatory Awards) (Amendment) Regulations 1991. Subject to parliamentary approval, these will amend the regulations covering England and Wales for the current academic year in the following respects.

First, they will give effect to the arrangements for architecture students announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 6 February, Official Report, columns 145-46. Following the redesignation of architecture courses, they will provide for a mandatory award this year to any eligible student who has not already received a bursary under the temporary scheme established last autumn.

Secondly, they will provide for fees-only or full mandatory awards as appropriate for certain students whose ordinary residence included periods spent in the territory of the former German Democratic Republic before unification. This is a technical change to put these students on the same footing as those whose residential qualifications were acquired elsewhere in EC territory.

Thirdly, the amendments will dispense with the allowance which has hitherto been payable, at discretion, to students who would otherwise suffer undue hardship during the vacation. This allowance is no longer needed, now that the resources available to students have been substantially increased, notably with the introduction of loans. Its removal will ease local education authorities' administration of awards. Students will still be eligible for the extra weeks study allowance if they are required to attend their courses during the vacation.

Finally, the amendments will correct some minor technical ambiguities in the provisions for termly payment of fees, for certain exceptional entitlements to a mandatory award following previous award-supported study, and for the scope of the basic disabled student's allowance.

WALES

Children's Hospital, Ely

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the relative costs of procedures and operations at the children's ear, nose and throat hospital, Ely, Cardiff relative to the costs of other hospitals for similar (a) outpatient and (b) inpatient cases.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not held centrally.

Archaeological Explorations

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of instances in Wales whereby landowners have been required to incur the costs of archaeological explorations and/or excavations; and if he will indicate the total cost of such work.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There is no specific statutory provision to require landowners to meet the costs of archaeological explorations and/or excavations. However, the treatment of archaeological remains can be a material consideration in the determination of planning applications and local planning authorities can impose appropriate conditions to protect monuments or ensure access for archaeologists. In addition voluntary agreements can also be made under section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to provide for archaeological works. Such local arrangements are matters for the interested parties and are notified to the Department.

Sheep Farming

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with Welsh farmers about the future of the sheep industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The sheep industry is a regular subject of discussion in the frequent meetings I have with farmers and their representatives. The Government continue to support the industry and last year took full advantage of the European Commission's decision to bring forward the two advance payments of sheep annual premium. In 1991, sheep producers in the LFA will benefit from substantial increases in the rate of HLCA payments, and a supplement of 4 ecu to the sheep annual premium, which together will increase the support payments to producers in Wales by some £18 million.

Knacker Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in Wales on the knacker industry; and what representations he has received.

Mr. David Hunt: I am aware of the concerns of the knacker industry. It is central to our waste disposal practice and for many years has provided a vital service. A Community directive agreed last November lays down harmonised rules about the disposal of animal waste. We have secured, against the opposition of other member states, provision for the knacker trade to continue in its present form at least until 1995 and then the possibility of continuation after that date.

Local Government

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he intends to publish concerning his proposals for unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have made no proposals for unitary authorities and the question of guidelines does not arise. I have received some representations that we should move towards such a system, but I do not intend to make any decisions until I have had the benefit of further discussions with the Welsh local authority associations.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of community and town councils.

Mr. David Hunt: Community and town councils play an important role in many parts of Wales. In considering the merits of any proposals put to me for reorganisation of Welsh local government, I intend to take careful account of their implications for the continued effective operation of these councils.

Historic Monuments Agency

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the performance targets he is setting for 1991-92 in relation to the establishment of CADW: the Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency.

Sir Wyn Roberts: CADW: Welsh Historic Monuments will formally become an executive agency under the "next steps" initiative on 1 April this year. It is responsible for the discharge of the Secretary of State's statutory functions relating to the preservation, protection and maintenance of ancient monuments, historic buildings and conservation areas within Wales.

The chief executive will be personally responsible for achieving improvements in efficiency, effectiveness and in customer services. To enable him to exercise that responsibility, my right hon. Friend has made delegations of authority to him, which are set out in the agency's framework document, which defines the respective roles and responsibilities of the agency chief executive, the Welsh Office and the Secretary of State for Wales. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Each year we shall be setting demanding financial and service targets for CADW. The targets set for its first year of operation as an agency, financial year 1991-92, are as follows:

A. Conservation/preservation

(i) Completion to time and within cost of 85 per cent. of priority conservation projects identified in the quinquennial review of properties in care.

(ii) Notification to applicants of decisions on Historic Buildings Council grant applications within 18 weeks of receipt in 85 per cent. of cases.

(iii) Determination of 75 per cent. of scheduled monument consent cases within 90 days.

(iv) Determination of 75 per cent. of listed building consent referrals in 28 days; 90 per cent. within 60 days.
(v) Complete 12 historic building listing re-surveys in the year, where each re-survey covers one or more community districts.
(vi) Decide on 30 ancient monuments within the scheduling enhancement programme in the year. This programme is rationalising the existing schedule of ancient monuments and identifying representative samples of different monument classes for scheduling.

B. Presentation
(vii) Generate increase in receipts to £2·76 million from the 1990-91 forecast outturn of £2·4 million.
(viii) Maintain overall market share of the top 20 heritage sites in Wales at 66·6 per cent., which represents about 1·4 million visitors to CADW sites.

C. Administration
(ix) Operate within allocated programme and running cost budgets.
(x) Generate a 1·5 per cent. efficiency improvement against gross running costs covering all of the agency's operations.

Performance against these targets will be assessed in the agency's annual report which we will lay before the House as soon as possible after the year end.

CADW remains part of the Welsh Office, and my right hon. Friend will remain accountable to this House for CADW. Where hon. or right hon. Members have queries about matters relating to the operations of CADW I hope that they will write in the first instance to the chief executive at Brunel house, 2 Fitzalan road, Cardiff CF2 1UY. If Members remain dissatisfied after receiving a reply from CADW they will be able to raise the issue with my right hon. Friend. We will, of course, continue to deal with questions of policy and the provision of resources.

The Secretary of State approved the appointment of Mr. John Carr, the current director of CADW, as the chief executive of the agency for the next three years. We wish the chief executive and his staff every success for the future. I am confident that the enhanced responsibilities which they have will enable them to meet their objectives in respect of the built heritage of Wales while giving better value for money.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to establish a regional assembly for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The local authorities association and others have pressed upon me the case for such an assembly to perform executive functions in the Principality. I have not reached a final decision on this question, but I have to say that the suggestions that have been put to me pose very considerable problems, not least because of the uncertainties and ambiguities about the respective responsibilities of the Secretary of State and of the assembly and about the powers of the assembly. I am not at present persuaded that the creation of an assembly along these lines would be in the best interests of the people of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in his review of the structure and function of local councils in Wales what consideration he has given to the likely cost of establishing a Welsh assembly.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 26 March 1991]: The proposals for an assembly which have been put to me are not sufficiently precise to allow for an accurate costing, but the costs would certainly be considerable. Estimates made in the White Paper "Our Changing Democracy"—Cm 6348, 1975—increased to allow for inflation, suggest that the annual running costs of an assembly could be between £40 million and £50 million. The "Vote No" lobby issued a booklet in February 1979 which put the cumulative costs of an assembly over a 21-year period. That total, increased for inflation, would now be £1 billion.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Ethiopian Government concerning the cutting off of the joint relief partnership supply route from Assab port to famine areas of northern Ethiopia since 17 March.

Mrs. Chalker: We made representations with the donor group in Addis Ababa on 22 March. On 25 March the Ethiopian Government announced that the southern line would reopen. We understand that convoys began moving again on 26 March, when 40 trucks left Dessie to travel north.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total amount of United Kingdom aid for cross-border relief into Tigray and Eritrea given since September 1990 to date; and what plans he has to give further assistance for cross-border operations.

Mrs. Chalker: About £6·3 million. We shall continue to provide humanitarian relief aid to Eritrea and Tigray using the most effective means available, including cross-border where appropriate.

Thailand

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to reduce or cut off bilateral aid to Thailand following the recent military coup.

Mrs. Chalker: We are following political developments closely and will take them into account in reaching decisions on new aid activities.

TRANSPORT

Road Building

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (i) areas of outstanding natural beauty and (ii) sites of special scientific interest which lie within the path of currently proposed routes for his Department's road building programme.

Mr. Chope: All trunk road schemes are designed to avoid unnecessary adverse impact on the environment and to maximise the environmental gains which result from new roads. Wherever possible roads are kept away from protected areas such as areas of outstanding natural beauty and sites of special scientific interest, and when there is a risk that a proposed scheme will affect such an area it is examined with particular care to establish that a new road is needed and that the route has been chosen to do as little damage to the environment as practicable. The Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission are consulted from the earliest stages of route proposals, and measures to mitigate impact or to recreate habitats are agreed with them.

Areas of outstanding natural beauty now cover more than 13 per cent. of the land area of England and Wales and existing trunk roads already run through many of them. Improvements to those routes may affect 12 of the 38 areas of outstanding natural beauty. They are:

Chilterns
Cotswolds
Cornwall
Cranborne Chase and West Wiltshire Downs
Dorset
Kent Downs
High Weald
East Hampshire
North Downs
North Wessex Downs
Surrey Hills
Sussex Downs

More than 5,300 sites of special scientific interest cover about 7 per cent. of the land area of Great Britain. Currently proposed routes for road improvements have some impact on 27 sites of special scientific interest—0·5 per cent. of the total:

Bingley South Bog
Boilton Wood
Chasewater Heath
Clints Hill
Coombe Haven (corridor for road reserved at designation)
Duddon Sands
Eashing Copse
Fleam Dyke/Roman Road
Folkestone and Etchinghill Escarpment
Folkestone Warren
Goss Moor
Hampton Rock Cutting
Hilton Gravel Pits
Hindhead Common
Hook Moor (road verge designated as SSSI)
Hurcott and Podmore Pools
New Forest
Oxleas Wood
Rainham Marshes
River Wye
Roughdown Common
St. Catherine's Hill
Snelsmore Common
Swale
The Roughs
Winchester Meadows
Woolston Eyes

When construction of the A595 Egremont bypass is complete, it is proposed to designate a rocky outcrop exposed by the roadworks as an SSSI. There are other examples of road construction itself leading to the creation of scientifically valuable habitats.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on requirements for major maintenance on motorways and other trunk roads.

Mr. Chope: The Department has made good progress towards eliminating by 1992-93 the backlog of maintenance identified in the early 1980s. In the current financial year, renewal achieved has exceeded our target by some 10 per cent. and I expect the target again to be exceeded in the forthcoming financial year.

Traffic growth, particularly in recent years, has greatly exceeded that forecast when much of the present network was built. Over the last six years extensive data on network conditions have been collected and these have now been analysed to provide comprehensive information on future maintenance needs. Results indicate that an effective programme of maintenance will require a level of activity significantly above 1991-92 level.

The information from this work will be updated annually so that progress can be monitored and requirements reviewed.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much it will cost his Department to assess competing bids for transport supplementary grant for highway structural maintenance on the primary route network.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The assessment of competing bids for TSG will not necessitate any increase in departmental staff.

Tank and Bottled Gas

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set up an inquiry into the price of tank and bottled gas in the Province.

Mr. Needham: The Director General of the Office of Fair Trading is already making inquiries into the operation of the liquefied petroleum gas market throughout the United Kingdom. I have alerted him to the impact recent price increases are having in Northern Ireland and the director general has undertaken to let me know the outcome of his inquiries.

Civil Service

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department last conducted a survey of the ethnic origins of its employees; when it next plans to do so; and whether he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave him on 12 March 1991, Official Report, columns 466-67.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of officers in each of grades 1 to 7 and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave him on 12 March 1991, Official Report, column 467.

Dunover Road, Ballywalter

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to improve the roadway, known as Dunover road, Ballywalter, between Broadway and The Manse beyond the 30mph sign; whether a footway will be provided along this stretch of road; what information he has on the number of schoolchildren walking along this roadway; and whether any work will commence at this location in the current year.

Mr. Needham: A scheme to realign a section of Dunover road between Broadway and the existing length of footway has started; it will include the provision of a footway. There are no proposals for improving the remainder of Dunover road at present.

No information is available on the number of schoolchildren who walk along the road in question.

Boyd House, Ards Hospital

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residents there are in Boyd house at Ards hospital; whether new residents are still being accepted; and if he will make a statement about the future of Boyd house.

Mr. Hanley: There are 43 residents in Boyd house, a 52-place unit for the elderly. There is no waiting list for admission and new residents are still being accepted. The organisation of services at local level is a matter for health and social services boards. I am not aware of any proposals by the Eastern board relating to the future of Boyd house.

Police Complaints Commission

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for copies of the report of the triennial review by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland to be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The report has been laid today. It reviews the working of articles 4 to 16 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 during the period 1988 to 1991.

This is the first such report from the commission, which was established in 1988. I am glad to note that in general terms it is satisfied with the statutory procedures in the order for the handling of complaints from the public against individual police officers. However, it has made nine recommendations which it considers will further enhance these procedures and, before reaching any decision on them, I intend consulting the various interested bodies. I shall report to the House further in due course.

I am grateful to the commission for the considerable effort that has been put into the preparation of the report. It has now had three years' experience of the system for handling complaints and it is only right and proper that its views backed by operational experience should be the basis for a re-examination of the procedures. The commission, by its fair and thorough handling of individual complaints, has already done much to improve the relationship between the police and the public it serves. Its triennial review is further evidence that it is concerned to ensure that the complaints system operates efficiently, effectively and impartially for all the parties involved and, most importantly, that it is seen to do so.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing the Rate Collection Agency.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to announce that the Rate Collection Agency will be established as an executive agency of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland with effect from 1 April 1991. It is responsible for the collection of rates and administration of the housing benefit scheme for owner-occupiers. I am confident that the new status as a "next steps" agency will lead to a significant and sustained improvement in the delivery of this important public service. I am delegating full managerial authority for the agency's day-to-day operations to the chief executive. The policy and resources framework for the agency is set out in the framework document, copies of which are being placed in the Library of the House. For 1991-92, the following targets have been set for the agency:

(i) To reduce debt to below 2 per cent. of the gross collectable rate, excluding late assessments, by 31 March 1992.
(ii) To achieve a reduction of 1·6 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of collecting rates per hereditament.
(iii) To generate refunds to 90 per cent. of ratepayers so entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.
(iv) To process by 31 March 1992, 75 per cent. of applications in respect of the incoming year received from existing housing benefit recipients before 16 March 1992.
(v) To achieve a 1·5 per cent. reduction in the real value of the unit costs of processing housing benefit applications.
(vi) To achieve 96 per cent. of housing benefit assessments free of error.

The Rate Collection Agency has also to achieve running costs cash efficiency savings of at least 1·5 per cent. in addition to projected non-cash efficiency savings.

PRIME MINISTER

Council of Europe

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Prime Minister if he will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation for the 43rd session of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: The 43rd session of the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe will be opened in Strasbourg on 22 April 1991. The delegation from the United Kingdom for the session will consist of 11 Members of the Conservative party, six Members of the Labour party and one Member of the Liberal Democrat party. I have also appointed a number of substitute delegates.

The appointments of representatives and substitutes have been made on the basis of nominations by the leaders of those parties concerned.

The same delegation will be representing the United Kingdom Parliament at the assembly of the Western European Union, which next meets in Paris on 3 June.

Representatives from the Government Benches will be:

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg)—who will act as leader of both delegations.

My hon. Friends the Members for:

Don Valley (Mr. Redmond)
Warley, East (Mr. Faulds)
Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks)
Cunninghame, South (Mr. Lambie)
and Lord Kirkhill

From the Liberal Democrats party:

The Lord Mackie of Benshie

Former Prime Ministers

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has any plans to assist former Prime Ministers with their office and secretarial expenses.

The Prime Minister: I propose to establish, with effect from 1 April 1991, a financial allowance to help former Prime Ministers to meet the continuing additional office costs which they are liable to incur because of their special position in public life. The new allowance, which will be equivalent in amount to the parliamentary office costs allowance, will be payable in respect of office and secretarial expenses incurred in connection with their public duties. It will be paid from the Cabinet Office vote. The allowance will not be payable to a former Prime Minister occupying the position of Leader of the Opposition and therefore in receipt of "Short" money.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Yugoslav Government regarding recent violence against the Albanian minority in Kosova; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our western partners are continuing to urge the Serbian authorities to ensure the human and political rights of ethnic Albanians in Kosovo.

Albania

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent proposals have been received by Her Majesty's Government from the Government of Albania regarding the restoration of full and formal diplomatic relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British and Albanian officials met in November and December of last year to discuss outstanding bilateral issues, including the possible resumption of diplomatic relations. We have not since then received any further proposals from the Albanians.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the United Kingdom delegates to the amendment conference for the partial nuclear test ban treaty in January made to the criticisms of United Kingdom policy of continued nuclear warhead testing put forward by the Mauritius, Brazilian and Pakistan delegations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The head of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference made clear our position: because our security will depend for the foreseeable future on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons, we have continuing need to test our nuclear weapons to ensure that they remain effective and up to date.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was made by the United Kingdom delegation to the amendment conference for the partial nuclear test ban treaty held in January, to the proposals submitted in draft for a verification protocol II to the partial nuclear test ban treaty to assist in the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We made it clear at the conference that we do not believe that a comprehensive test ban could be properly verified. We believe that the conference on disarmament at Geneva provides the most appropriate forum for discussion of progress on nuclear testing issues.

Thailand

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Thai authorities to encourage a restoration of democracy and an end to repression.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made clear, both to the National Peace Keeping Committee and the interim civilian Government, our great regret at the removal of a democratically elected civilian Government and the imposition of martial law; and our hope for the swift restoration of democracy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Middle East

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences he has granted for the sale of conventional or non-conventional weapons to middle eastern states since the ending of the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the period from 1 to 20 March 1991, 50 export licences have been granted for the supply of conventional weapons to the following middle eastern countries:
UAE, Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Yemen.
There were no export licences for non-conventional weapons.

Cosmetics (Animal Testing)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to end the testing of cosmetic products on animals: and what assessment he has made of the effect which the completion of the single market will have on such experimentation in Britain.

Mr. Leigh: No. The law requires cosmetic products to be safe for use by the public, and in some cases the only way of ensuring this is to test them on animals. We are, however, seeking to keep to the essential minimum the increased testing proposed by the European Commission.

Baghdad Arms Exhibition

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what grounds BAe was given an export licence to exhibit a jet trainer aircraft at the Baghdad arms exhibition in 1989.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on individual export licence cases.

Applications for export licences are considered on their merits. Licences for international exhibitions normally require the goods to remain under the control of the exporter and to be returned to the United Kingdom within a specified period.

Trade Descriptions Act

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will complete his review of the Trade Descriptions Act.

Mr. Leigh: Consideration of the responses to the consultation document issued as part of the review is continuing and I shall announce my conclusions as soon as possible.

Timeshare

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received during 1991 from companies selling and marketing timeshare properties.

Mr. Leigh: I have received one such representation.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to discuss in the European Council of Ministers the marketing of timeshare properties.

Mr. Leigh: It is for the presidency to arrange the timing and agenda of meetings of the Council of Ministers. No meeting of the Consumer Council has yet been arranged by the current presidency.

Inward Investment, London

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a list of the figures for inward investment projects involving international firms for the London boroughs of Barnet, Enfield and Haringey, and for the constituencies of Tottenham, Hornsey and Wood Green, Edmonton, Enfield, North and Enfield, Southgate, for each year since 1979 in terms of the number of projects, new jobs and safeguarded jobs.

Mr. Leigh: I regret that the information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Telephone Engineers (Line Tapping)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will discuss with the chairman of British Telecom and the Director General of the Office of Telecommunications what evidence there is of telephone engineers tapping into private subscribers' lines to make 898 and other premium-rate or long-distance calls; and what steps are being taken to prevent this from occurring.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a discussion. This is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications, Sir Bryan Carsberg. I understand that he has instructed his staff to conduct a thorough and wide-ranging review of all premium-rate disputes. The investigation of allegations that telephone engineers have been tapping into private subscribers' lines to make illicit calls will form part of that review.

South Africa

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report on how British companies have complied with the European Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the 12-month period to 30 June 1990.

Mr. Lilley: By 15 March 1991, 107 companies had submitted reports to the DTI under the code of conduct. Copies of the reports and of the Department's analysis and summary have, as in previous years, been placed in the Library of each House. These documents may also be inspected at the Department's export market information centre, at the British embassy in Pretoria, at the British consulate-general in Johannesburg, and at the British consulates in Cape Town and Durban.

The analysis and summary is the fifth since the adoption of the revised code of conduct by EC Foreign Ministers in November 1985. Reports were received from all British companies, except one, whose interests are known or believed to warrant a full report under the code. The company which did not report was reminded of the existence of the code.

The reporting period under review has seen a marginal increase in the number of black employees of British subsidiaries being paid below the code's recommended minimum level. This increase is due to one company having acquired two new subsidiaries during the reporting period. This particular company intends to raise the wage levels in these two subsidiaries to at least the code's minimum level.

Companies' reports indicated that the level of their involvement with trade unions representing black workers increased, with the majority of companies reporting formal involvement with the trade unions. Many companies have taken steps to alleviate the particular hardships experienced by their migrant workers.

The number of companies providing training schemes has continued to increase, and as in previous years, all companies provided "on-the-job" training. In addition, companies continued to report impressive levels of involvement in projects benefiting not only their employees and their families but the wider communities from which their work force were drawn. Companies also continued to encourage the growth of black business.

The report reflects the increasing level of unemployment in South Africa, with a number of companies reporting a contraction of their black work force. This disturbing trend has continued since the period covered by the report: the South African Chamber of Business now estimates that over 40 per cent. of the economically active population are unemployed. This illustrates the pressing need to restore growth to the South African economy.

The Government are once more grateful to companies for their continued co-operation in providing reports and urge them to maintain this performance and to comply fully with the code.

Professional Qualifications

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will lay regulations to implement EC directive 89/48/EEC on the recognition of professional qualifications.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have today laid in Parliament the European Communities (Recognition of Professional Qualifications) Regulations 1991 under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. These regulations would implement into United Kingdom law Council directive 89/48/EEC on a general system for the recognition of higher education diplomas awarded on completion of professional education and training of at least three years' duration.

The directive represents a significant improvement in the opportunities that will be available to members of the professions throughout the Community. It will enable a professional to use his home state professional qualification to obtain access to the equivalent profession in other member states. He will not have to have to undergo the education and training required for the profession in the other member states. The directive will also benefit consumers who will gain from improved competition in professional services.

The United Kingdom would be only the second member state, after Ireland, to have implemented the directive in full. I am anxious that consumers in the United Kingdom should enjoy the benefits of improved competition in the provision of professional services as soon as possible. This action maintains the excellent record of the United Kingdom on the implementation of Community directives.

I will also be encouraging other member states to fulfil their Community obligations without delay so that United Kingdom professionals are able to take full advantage of the system of mutual recognition established by the directive.

Tied Pubs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has considered representations for a deferment of the date by which national brewers have to release pubs from ties.

Mr. Lilley: Yes. I have considered carefully representations both for and against the deferment of the November 1992 date by which major brewers are required by the Beer Orders to release pubs from ties. I have concluded after weighing up all these representations that amending the orders in this way could not be justified. Brewers will have had three years in which to make their dispositions by November 1992. Deferring the date would be unfair to those national and regional brewers who have already taken steps to comply with or take advantage of the order and would prolong uncertainty for tenants.

The Beer Orders require brewers owning more than 2,000 pubs to free up from tie half they own in excess of 2,000 by 1 November 1992. There are at least four ways in which a brewer can free up a pub from tie: the pub can be leased to the sitting tenant free of any ties; sold to the sitting tenant; sold with sitting tenant to a third party; and sold with vacant possession. Only the last of these four options would involve the eviction of the tenant.

I am naturally concerned about statements by certain brewers that they will issue "notices to quit" to large numbers of their tenants, even though the number issued is likely to be much lower than the figures that have been mentioned in the press. I understand that most of these notices will be issued by two national brewers in order to renegotiate the terms of their tenancy agreements and will not ultimately lead to evictions. I have urged the brewers concerned to keep the number of notices they send out to an absolute minimum and to make their purpose clear to tenants.

Deferring the November 1992 date in the Beer Orders would not affect the date by which the brewers would have to send out "notices to quit" since this is determined by the fact that all tenancy agreements will be protected by the Landlord and Tenant Act by July 1992. It has been put to me that there would be no need to issue "notices to quit" if the date in the Beer Orders was deferred since this would allow pubs to be sold as they become available through natural wastage. However, brewers will have had three years by November 1992 in which to take action to comply with the order. This already represents a year more than was originally recommended by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in its report on the supply of beer. Four of the six major brewers have either already taken or announced steps to comply with the order by November 1992. It is not clear why these should be disadvantaged because the other two have been slower in taking action.

Several national brewers who have already taken steps to comply with the orders have made it clear they do not wish to see any deferment of the November 1992 date. A large number of the regional brewers have expressed strong opposition to any change in the date as they are keen to strengthen their brewing base by acquiring further premises and selling to more "free outlets". They regard the present orders as a balance between the interests of brewers of different sizes which would be upset if there was a change in the date. A number have suggested that deferring the date in the order might lead to further regional brewers withdrawing altogether from brewing. Tenants' representatives have also generally made it clear that deferring the date would be unwelcome as it would prolong uncertainty for their members.

I recognise that the changes taking place are unsettling for many in the industry. But they also offer opportunities —to tenants to manage their own businesses and to brewers to compete in a larger free trade market. I believe that it would be wrong to change the timing now, given the way many national and regional brewers have already responded to the orders and given the further uncertainty that would be created for pub tenants if the implementation date were delayed.

Beer

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the reasons for non-implementation of section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985 as it affects the head on a measure of beer.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 March 1991]: I have no plans to implement section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985 because there is little evidence that individual consumers are dissatisfied with how beer is served.

Kuwait Oil Fires

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communications he has had from Ventron Technology Ltd. of Reddish, Stockport, about equipment to extinguish Kuwait well fires; and what steps his Department has taken to meet representatives of Ventron and to put forward their ideas for dealing with the problem to the Kuwait Government.

British Shipbuilders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark), on 18 March, Official Report, column 20, if he will make a statement concerning the details of the settlement of the outstanding claim made by Trafalgar House against British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 March 1991]: The settlement was in respect of an action brought by Trafalgar House for which British Shipbuilders have not admitted liability. The claim was for alleged losses of £191 million plus interest from 1984 due to alleged misrepresentations by British Shipbuilders following the privatisation of the Scott Lithgow yard.

The legal costs for each side were likely to run into tens of millions of pounds had the action come to court.

The £17 million cash settlement, plus the forgoing by British Shipbuilders of a counterclaim for £8 million from Trafalgar House, therefore represents a considerable potential saving for the public purse.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a table of expenditure showing the cost of running each regional office of his Department in 1989-90, excluding the funding programmes operated by the offices.

	£ thousands
East Midlands	1,598
West Midlands	2,951

Kuwait

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role his Department has taken in assisting British companies to secure contracts to rebuild Kuwait.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 20 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), at column 157.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the impact of the poll tax on the demand for help and advice from citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Leigh: Citizens advice bureaux have had to deal with a number of inquiries arising from the introduction of the community charge, just as they used to on rates. The number of inquiries on the community charge, rose in 1989-90 compared to 1988-89, but there was no significant change in the total number of inquiries dealt with by bureaux in 1989-90 compared to 1988-89. Figures relating to the current financial year are not yet available.

The Department of Environment has agreed to give the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux £36,000 this year to help with the costs of training bureaux workers to deal with these inquiries. The Scottish Office has also given Citizens Advice Scotland £36,000 over the last two years for the same purpose.

Smoked Salmon

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the duties placed on (a) fresh and (b) smoked salmon from (i) Norway and (ii) Canada, when imported into (1) EC countries and (2) the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: The duty payable under the common customs tariff—CTT—on imports into EC countries of fresh salmon from Norway and Canada is 2 per cent. The CTT duty rate on imports into EC countries of smoked salmon from Norway and Canada is 13 per cent.

The duties payable on imports into the United States of America of smoked salmon from Norway and Canada are 5 and 2 per cent. respectively. All imports of fresh salmon into the United States of America are free of customs duty. However, as a result of a preliminary determination, fresh and chilled Atlantic salmon imported from Norway into the United States of America is currently subject to anti-dumping duties ranging from 15·65 to 31·81 per cent.

Germany (Trade Balance)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will initiate inquiries into the reason for the adverse trade balance with Germany.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have no plans to initiate inquiries. Last year our exports to Germany increased by 18·5 per cent. in value over 1989.

SCOTLAND

Historic Buildings Council

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the commercial relationships between Mr. Marc Ellington and Mr. Richard Emerson of the Historic Buildings Council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. Marc Ellington is a member of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland, a statutory advisory body appointed by my right hon. Friend. Mr. Richard Emerson is not a member of the council; he is a principal inspector of historic buildings in Historic Buildings and Monuments, Scotland, which is part of the Scottish Environment Department. Mr. Ellington and Mr. Emerson have had no commercial dealings in any official capacity.

My right hon. Friend is aware that reference was made in a television programme broadcast on Channel 4 on 10 March to the purchase by Mr. Emerson from Mr. Ellington of a plot of land at Crovie in 1985. This was an entirely proper private transaction between two individuals. Their public duties did not overlap, and Mr. Emerson informed his senior officer of his intentions in 1985. Mr. Ellington and Mr. Emerson both retain the complete confidence of my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will obtain for his Department's library a copy of the "Scottish Eye" programme on Channel 4, broadcast on 10 March.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps his Department is taking to monitor and evaluate the continuing care of patients discharged from psychiatric hospital into the community, further to paragraph 1.29 of "Community Care into the Next Decade and Beyond";

(2) what steps he is taking to monitor and evaluate the continuing care of mentally ill people resident in the community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 places a duty on local authorities and health boards jointly to prepare and publish, by 1 April 1992, in consultation with health boards, community care plans. We intend to monitor carefully the implementation of these plans, including the care of people with mental health problems discharged from psychiatric hospitals and resident in the community. The plans should define objectives and targets and include procedures for monitoring the achievement of effective community care.

Health boards will shortly be consulted on draft guidance on the introduction of care programmes for people with a mental illness. The main purpose of care programmes is to ensure that no person who has been treated for long-term mental illness is discharged from hospital without proper arrangements being made for his or her continuing care in the community. It will be for health boards and local authorities to satisfy themselves that there are relevant community-based health and social work services to allow each discharged person to live satisfactorily in the community.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, for each health board (a) the number of patients discharged from psychiatric hospitals and (b) the number of readmissions to psychiatric hospitals, for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table:

Homelessness

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will revise the code of guidance on homelessness legislation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We issued a revised draft of the code of guidance on the homelessness legislation for consultation in October 1990. A large number of responses were received; these have now been carefully considered and the revised code will be published soon.

Fisheries Enforcement

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about his plans to establish the Scottish fisheries enforcement services as a "next steps" agency.

Mr. Lang: I informed the House on 28 February of my intention to establish the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency as an executive agency on 1 April 1991. My noble Friend will preside at a launch ceremony on 12 April.

For the 1991-92 financial year I have set the agency the following targets:

	Targets
Aerial surveillance—per cent. of hours flown on task	78 per cent.
Cost per aircraft sighting	£137
Marine surveillance—number of boardings at sea	2,750
Marine surveillance—cost per boarding	£2,263
Sea Fisheries Inspectorate—cost per £1 million of fish landed	£4,838
50 per cent. of cases for prosecution to be reported within 4 weeks of offence taking place and 90 per cent. within 6 weeks
Number of cases where court proceedings are taken as percentage of offences reported for prosecution	75 per cent.

In order to ensure that the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency uses its resources efficiently, I have set it a target to achieve cash-releasing efficiency gains of at least 1·5 per cent. and its running cost limit for 1991-92 has been set on that basis.

The agency chief executive will be directly accountable to me for the agency's achievements of these targets, which will be reported in the agency's published annual report.

I will place a copy of the agency's framework document in the Libraries of both Houses.

Historic Scotland

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about his plans to establish Historic Scotland as an executive agency.

Mr. Lang: I informed the House on 28 February of my intention to establish Historic Scotland as an executive agency on 1 April. I can now confirm that the agency will indeed be set up on that date and that I shall preside at a launch ceremony on 8 April.

For 1991-92, the first year of operation, I have set the following key performance targets for Historic Scotland:

Number of monuments newly scheduled. The target is to schedule 280 monuments in 1991-92, in addition to the 4,800 already scheduled.

Number of completed units of the resurvey of listed buildings. The target is to complete 200 survey units in 1991-92.

Number of general historic building repair grant cases in payment. The target is to effect payment to 400 cases in 1991-92, giving priority to the most important buildings.

Number of visitors to monuments in care where an admission charge is made. The target is to increase visitor numbers by 4·5 per cent. to 2·71 million in 1991-92.

Total income. The target is to increase income to £6 million in 1991-92.

Conservation backlog on monuments in care. The target is to contain, and if possible to reduce, the backlog of overdue maintenance.

Value for money savings on maintenance of monuments in care. A target will be developed for 1992-93.

Surplus on commercial activities. A target will be developed for 1992-93.

Exchequer contribution to Historic Scotland's work. The target for 1991-92 is to keep the increase in the call on the Exchequer for net current expenditure at or below the level of inflation.

In order to ensure that Historic Scotland uses its domestic resources efficiently, I have set it a target to achieve cash-releasing efficiency gains of 1·5 per cent. and its running cost limit for 1991-92 has been set on that basis.

The director of Historic Scotland, as the agency's chief executive, will be directly accountable to me for the achievement of these targets, which will be reported in the agency's published annual report.

I will place a copy of the agency's framework document in the Libraries of both Houses.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he is making to publish the management statement for Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Enterprise management statement sets out the financial, managerial and operational framework within which Scottish Enterprise will operate.

I am arranging for copies to be laid in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Community Health

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the results of the research project "Community Health Promotion in a Deprived Area" funded by his Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 March 1991]: Copies of a report on a pilot project "Royston Wardieburn Community Health Project" and one on "Community Health Promotion in a Deprived Area" have been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Single Parents

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what improvements Her Majesty's Government have introduced to help the single parent obtain maintenance payments.

Mr. Jack: The Government have taken a number of steps to help parents obtain maintenance for their children. This Department has enhanced its action on recovery of maintenance for those claiming income support. For instance, we have improved our instructions on the interviewing of mothers who have never been married about the identity of the absent father. We have also introduced a number of measures that apply to all lone parents, whether divorced, separated or never married. We have strengthened the basis on which local social security offices assess absent parents' ability to pay maintenance. We have improved our ability to trace missing parents by reaching an agreement with the Inland Revenue to provide the address of an absent parent and the absent parent's employer. The Social Security Act 1990 gave the Department new powers to seek to include the costs of caring for children in orders obtained by the DSS for children, to transfer an order for a child obtained by the Department to a caring parent who leaves income support, and to enforce a caring parent's own private maintenance order. We have made clear the importance to be attached to this work in local offices and set targets to increase the amount recovered. In addition, the Home Office has introduced the Maintenance Enforcement Bill, which seeks to improve arrangements for paying maintenance under the current system.

For the future, we have introduced the Child Support Bill, which aims to replace the present child maintenance system, which is fragmented, uncertain in its results, slow and ineffective, with a Child Support Agency which will use a formula to calculate child maintenance. This will be available to all seeking child maintenance and it is hoped that it will be fully operational by 1995.

Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables similar to his Department's tax/benefit model table showing the net weekly spending power for each of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged eight, 11 and 15 years, (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years with weekly earnings of (i) £60, (ii) £80, (iii) £100, (iv) £120, (v) £140, (vi) £160, (vii) £180 and (viii) £200 under the existing tax and benefit system.

Mr. Jack: The information is set out in the tables. All assumptions are as set out in the published tax/benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge.

It should be noted that the results in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use hypothetical rents, so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay.

The figures are for the system before the Budget proposals come into effect and do not reflect the effect of the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill presently before Parliament.

Widows' Benefits

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will identify the cost of extending widow's related benefits to widowers; and if he will provide the costing for extending each of these benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The annual costs would be approximately as follows:

	£ million
Widowers' £1,000 payment	25
Widowed father's allowance	90
Widowers pension (widowers aged 45-65)	300
Total	415

Fraud

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security claimants have been (a) prosecuted and (b) found guilty of claiming benefit while working and receiving wages during each year from 1978-79 to the latest available date in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Scotland.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Supplementary Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of people, including children, dependent on supplementary benefit for 1979 and 1990; what is the projected number for 1991; and what was the number of supplementary benefit recipients for each of the years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information for 1990 is not available. Figures are given for 1979 and 1989, together with those projected for 1991-92.

Year	Claimants plus dependants 000s	Claimants 000s
1979 Supplementary Benefit	4,370	2,855
1989 Income Support	7,023	4,161
1991-92 Income support	7,157	4,240

Carers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give details of the social security benefits available to carers; and what steps his Department is taking to publicise the benefits;

(2) whether he will introduce a special payment for carers; and if he will make a statement on the financial position of carers.

Mr. Scott: All social security benefits are available to carers provided that they satisfy the relevant entitlement conditions. Invalid care allowance is the benefit specifically designed for carers. It is available to someone who has forgone the opportunity of full-time work in order to provide regular and substantial care to a severely disabled person. From 8 April 1991 the basic rate of invalid care allowance will be £31·25 each week. In addition, from October 1990, a carer premium of £10 a week, increasing to £10·80 in April 1991, was introduced in the income-related benefits, income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit for those receiving, or with an underlying entitlement to, invalid care allowance.

Information about invalid care allowance is contained in leaflet NI212, a revised and improved version of which will be available shortly. A leaflet about the carer premium (IS7) is available for professional advisers and the Department is currently working on the production of a leaflet detailing all benefits for carers which will be published later this year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 422, if he will publish the number of people on full social security benefit who were reimbursed for (a) the full 20 per cent. and (b) part of the 20 per cent. poll tax minimum payment in the current financial year.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no specific amount for the community charge in any one individual's benefit. The amount originally included in income support rates towards the 20 per cent. contribution was based on the average amount claimants were expected to have to pay. This now forms an integral part of overall rates.

Benefits and Contributions Agencies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will make an announcement about the establishment of the benefits and contributions agencies.

Mr. Newton: These agencies will come into being from April 1991 and I shall be formally launching them on 10 April. I am arranging for framework documents and business plans for both agencies to be placed in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claim each benefit payable (a) at each of the Nottingham social security offices and (b) in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1991]: Information for Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Information for the Nottingham area and for Great Britain is:

	Nottingham area[1]	Great Britain[1]

Sickness benefit/Invalidity benefit	14,960	1,623,000

HEALTH

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what immediate assistance is being offered by his Department to (a) Kuwait and (b) Iraq to combat the outbreak of infections arising from the damage done to water purification systems in the Gulf war.

Mr. Dorrell: The International Committee of the Red Cross sanitation teams are helping to restore the distribution of purified water in Iraq. On 14 March 1991 their first two water purification units began producing potable water in Baghdad. The United Kingdom supports the International Committee of the Red Cross work and has contributed £2·5 million to its Gulf appeal. The Government of Kuwait have made arrangements for the supply of purified water to the population in Kuwait. The United Kingdom Government have also contributed US $1 million to the United Nations and agencies through the United Nations Disaster Relief Organisation for their work in both these countries. We will be offering full collaboration to the United Nations and agencies for the supply of foodstuffs and medical supplies.

Haemophilia

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 86, (1) from what date the imported unlicensed high purity product from Kabi will be available to the National Institute of Biological Standards and Control for testing; and what is the anticipated release date for patient treatment using this product;

(2) on the Bio Products Laboratory, what assurances have been given by the Medicines Control Agency as to the safety of the unlicensed product due to be imported from Sweden relative to the licensed product available for the United Kingdom;

(3) what assurance has been given that the Medicines Control Agency will be provided with full details of the patients and doctors involved in the named-patient import of the unlicensed high purity factor VIII produce from Sweden.

Mr. Dorrell: In my reply to the hon. Member of 19 February at column 86, I explained that the Bio Products Laboratory's high purity product will be covered by arrangements leading to the removal of Crown immunity and is currently the subject of a full licensing application. The Medicines Control Agency will be considering this application. The product has already been tested by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control and is now available to clinicians under these arrangements and not on a named patient basis.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions are in place to ensure that when Crown immunity ceases the Bio Products Laboratory will have to conform in all respects to the same controls of the Medicines Act and to the same fair trading and free competition practices as currently apply to the commercial plasma industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: Officials of the Medicines Control Agency have for some months provided guidance and advice not only to Bio Products Laboratory, but to others in the NHS affected by the cessation of Crown immunity and the controls of the Medicines Act. This advice service will continue after Crown immunity ceases, and subject to the transitional arrangements for the removal of Crown immunity, the BPL will be treated under the Medicines Act in the same way as other pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 86, on the Bio Products Laboratory if he will indicate which products and facilities are currently licenced under cover of the licensing requirements of the Medicines Act.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested in respect of Bio Products Laboratory is confidential by virtue of the restrictions on disclosure contained in section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968.

In accordance with article 12 of the EC directive 65/65, the licensing authority publishes any grant of marketing authorisation in the Official Gazettes.

South Lincolnshire Health Authority

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors, (b) consultants and (c) nurses were employed by the South Lincolnshire health authority in March 1979 and in March 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows information up to the latest available date, which is 30 September 1989.

South Lincolnshire Health Authority
Staff in Post at 30 September each year.

	Nursing and Midwifery	Junior Staff[5]
1979	1,720[3]	[2]n/a
1982	1,800[4]	61·1
1989	2,100	80·0

Junior Staff
[1] Grades include Registrars, Senior House Officers, House Officers and Other Staff. Numbers of staff at Senior doctor level are available by region only since the contracts for these staff are held by their regional Headquarters.

[2] 1979 and 1991 figures are not available.
[3] Figures not adjusted to take account of the reduction in nurses' working hours during 1980-81 (from 40 to 37·5 hours per week).
[4] Reorganisation of District Health Authorities took place in 1982. Figures for 1979 are therefore not directly comparable.

NHS Estate Directorate

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress establishing his Department's NHS estate directorate as an executive agency.

Mr. Dorrell: I am pleased to announce that the estates directorate will be established as the NHS estate management and health building agency on 1 April, the first executive agency in the Department of Health. The agency's roles are (a) to provide Ministers, the NHS management executive and the NHS with professional and technical policy advice and support in the fields of NHS estate management and health building, and (b) to develop and make available to NHS authorities, trusts and others a range of specialist guidance and other products and services which embody key national policies and standards and reflect current best NHS practice. The agency's detailed aims, objectives and functions are set out in a framework document, copies of which are available in the Library. In accordance with "next steps" principles the agency will be free to propose further adaptations to it if changing circumstances make this appropriate.

The chief executive has been set the following key performance targets for 1991-92:

To keep within the 1991-92 agreed public expenditure survey baseline.

To make at least a 2 per cent. efficiency saving on the operating costs that are within this control.

To deliver 80 per cent. of all contracts on time and within estimated costs, which will then act as the baseline for further improvements in succeeding years.

To agree the business plan and key performance targets with Ministers by 30 June 1991.

Over the next four years, in keeping with the spirit of the wider NHS reforms, I will be setting the agency a range of key performance targets to ensure that it delivers progressive improvements in the quality and efficiency of its services to the NHS.

Census

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made in the 1991 census to protect the confidentiality of forms for households where the enumerator is known to them.

Mr. Dorrell: Census officers have been given a general instruction not to place enumerators in enumeration districts where they are likely to be widely known. However, there are some places where—because of the geography of the area or the shortage of applicants—it is impossible to do otherwise. More particularly, in some remote rural areas it may be necessary to appoint an enumerator who lives in the locality.

The Census Regulations 1990 provide a facility to cover such situations: the form filler may ask for an envelope in which the completed form may be sealed before it is collected; the enumerator is prohibited from opening it. Enumerators are instructed to offer a sealed return envelope if they come across anyone they know.

The same facility is available under the Census (Scotland) Regulations 1990.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in deciding which small voluntary follow-up surveys will use the 1991 census as the sampling frame.

Mr. Dorrell: Initial proposals for such surveys were given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health in December 1989 during the debate on the draft Census Order, cols. 10-11, Report of Fourth Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c. The state of progress on each of the surveys mentioned in these initial proposals is given later. No others are proposed.

Plans are well advanced for surveys to check the accuracy of census information, the completeness of electoral registers and vacant accommodation in Scotland.

A research proposal has been produced for the Department of Environment on the proposed surveys in England on households occupying privately rented accommodation and households sharing accommodation. If these surveys go ahead, the field work will be carried out in late 1991 and early 1992.

Discussions are also being held with relevant departments on follow-up surveys of people with nursing qualifications and paramedical qualifications but not employed in these specialisms and of persons with social work and probation officer qualifications. Decisions on whether these surveys should go ahead will be made in early 1992. The census will not now be used as the sampling frame for a survey of out-of-service teachers.

The information leaflet to be delivered to each household with the census form in the 10 days before the census on 21 April includes the following statement:

"A very small sample of people and households will be asked to take part in one of several voluntary surveys. One survey will help the Census Offices check how well the Census itself worked. The other surveys will gather fuller information than it is possible to collect in a Census. Information gathered in any such survey will be handled entirely within the Census Offices. It will be treated in the same strict confidence as information given on the Census form."

The confidentiality of information collected in these surveys will now be covered by the Census Act 1920, as amended by the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991, which received Royal Assent on 7 March.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his statement of 4 December 1990, Official Report, columns 173-74, on expressions of interest in national health service trust status, whether he has received any further expressions of interest in proceeding to develop their plans for national health service trust status for April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have now agreed that Southampton University hospital, which has expressed an interest in trust status, can proceed to work up an application to become a trust on 1 April 1992.

Hospital Beds (Children)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds in district health authority hospitals in the North West region were set aside for children in (a) 1979, (b) 1986 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is provided in the following table. Before 1987-88, information collected centrally on bed availability related to consultant department and did not show all beds set aside for children. Bed figures are now collected centrally by type of ward.

For more comprehensive information the hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. B. Martin, the chairman of the North Western regional health authority.

Carers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take to monitor the effect on carers of the return of patients to the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Local authorities, health authorities and family health services authorities will be expected to assess the community care needs of their residents and to show, in their community care plans, how they intend meeting them. We will be monitoring the implementation of their plans, through the Department's social services inspectorate and the NHS regional review process.

Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each regional health authority (a) the number of patients discharged from psychiatric hospitals and (b) the number of readmissions to psychiatric hospitals for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information available on discharges, after an ordinary admission, from national health service hospitals and hospital units in England is contained in the table. All figures exclude day cases.

Figures on hospital stays are available only for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89. A finished hospital stay is defined here as a discharge from a hospital, or death in hospital, or transfer to another hospital, after a period of care in one of the mental illness specialities.

Figures for finished consultant episodes are also provided for 1989-90. A finished consultant episode is defined here as the period a patient is under the care of a particular consultant in one of the mental illness specialities. A consultant episode may finish when either a patient changes consultant, dies, is discharged into the community, or is transferred to another hospital outside the existing district health authority of treatment.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave concerning figures by admission status to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 13 February at column 417.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to monitor and evaluate the continuing care of patients discharged from psychiatric hospital into the community in accordance with paragraph 1.29 of "Community Care into the Next Decade and Beyond".

Mr. Dorrell: New arrangements for the discharge of patients from psychiatric hospitals, known as the care programme approach, come into effect on 1 April. We have asked regional health authorities to confirm by 30 April that the new arrangements are in place. We also intend to commission research into the operation of the care programme approach.

Baby Units

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of special care baby units available in hospitals in England and Wales and the total number of places, for each year that figures are available since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The available information is given in the table. It should be noted that some health authorities provide intensive care facilities within maternity units. Information in respect of hospitals in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

Rents to Mortgages Scheme

14. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the pilot schemes to test the conversion of rents to mortgages for local authority tenants.

Sir George Young: Pilot schemes have been launched for new town tenants in Basildon and Milton Keynes. When the results are available, we will consider carefully whether to propose legislation extending rents to mortgages to local authority tenants.

Rural Development Commission

19. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total expenditure planned by the Rural Development Commission for the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Trippier: The Rural Development Commission estimates that its main programme expenditure on the Isle of Wight during the financial year 1991-92 will be around £800,000. This will be spent on workspace provision and a range of projects likely to help the local economy and the local community. In addition, the Commission's redundant building grant scheme and its business advisory service are available on the island.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

20. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with local authority associations on the implementation of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Trippier: Implementation of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 was one of a number of topics discussed at the first meeting of the Local and Central Government Environment Forum which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State chaired on 4 March. All three associations were present. Many meetings at official level have been held with the associations on particular parts of the Act which affect local authorities.

Community Charge

24. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of people who will benefit from the community charge reduction scheme (a) nationally and (b) in the area covered by Kirklees council.

Mr. Key: Our recent announcement means that every charge payer will first benefit from a cut in their bill of £140 after which community charge reductions and benefit are calculated. Our estimate of the number of people in England who will both get a £140 general reduction and a rates-related reduction is 8·2 million. Figures on the number of charge-payers in each area who will benefit from the community charge reduction scheme will be available once charging authorities have returned their grant claim forms to my Department.

25. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the workings of the community charge reduction scheme in relation to properties which were not individually rated.

Mr. Key: For practical reasons the community charge reduction scheme works by reference to the formerly rateable property and if a considerable number of people occupy the property, they receive little or no relief. However, such charge payers will all benefit from the £140 general reduction announced last week.

26. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to abolish the community charge by April 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes).

Bathing Water

27. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet water industry chiefs to discuss progress on implementing the EC directive on bathing water quality.

Mr. Baldry: We are fully committed to meeting the standards set in the directive as soon as is practicable and we maintain regular contacts with water companies about progress on their compliance programmes.

Estuaries

28. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council regarding the impact of the Leybucht Bay judgment in the European Court of Justice on the conservation of Britain's estuaries.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Local Government Finance

29. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to seek a form of local government taxation that costs the least amount to raise and to administer.

Mr. Portillo: As my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 21 March, ease of collection is one of the principles underlying our proposals for a new local tax.

30. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his study of reforms of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I have nothing to add at this stage to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 21 March.

31. Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the Government's review of the poll tax.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has met representatives of the Social and Liberal Democratic party, the Scottish Nationalist party, Plaid Cymru and the Ulster Unionist party as well as the local authority associations. Further meetings will be arranged as appropriate. In addition, we continue to receive a large volume of correspondence from hon. and right hon. Members of this House, representations from various institutions and organisations, and letters from the general public.

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of total local government current expenditure, excluding grants for domestic rate rebates, was accounted for by central Government revenue grant in each year from 1978-79 to the current year 1991-92; and what additional amount of Government grant would have been necessary to bring the percentage of Government grant in total local authority current expenditure up to the 1978-79 level.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The information for the English local authorities is as follows:

Government Grants to Local Authorities

	Government grants[1] as a percentage of local authority expenditure Per cent.	Additional grant needed to bring percentage to 1978-79 level Cash £ billion	Real terms (1978-79 prices) £ billion
1978-79 [2]	61	0	0
1979-80 [2]	59	0·36	0·31
1980-81 [2]	59	0·54	0·39
1981-82	55	1·21	0·80
1982-83	52	1·96	1·21
1983-84	52	2·12	1·25
1984-85	52	2·15	1·21
1985-86	51	2·35	1·25
1986-87	48	3·51	1·81
1987-88	46	4·12	2·01
1988-89	44	5·13	2·33
1989-90	42	6·22	2·66
1990-91	38	8·10	3·21
1991-92	51	3·94	1·46

[1] For the years 1978-89 to 1989-90 Government grants comprises aggregate Exchequer grant and rate rebate grants (excluding domestic rate rebates). For 1990-91 Government grants include revenue support grant, special grants, specific grants in aggregate external finance and transitional relief grant, but excludes community charge benefits. Government grants for 1991-92 are the same as 1990-91 except for the addition of Community charge grant.

[2] England and Wales—Community charge payers receive additional help through community charge benefit. In 1991-92 this is likely to be worth £1 billion (over £2·5 billions in 1978-79 prices).

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he estimates will be the cost to local authorities of the delay in sending out community charge invoices in the current year.

Mr. Key [holding answer Tuesday 26 March 1991]: None. The profile of payments to local authorities from the distributable amount of the non-domestic rate will be changed to increase the amounts paid in the early months of 1991-92. This will compensate authorities for the temporary cash shortfall likely to result from the proposals in the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill and related measures.

The Gulf

32. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions he has taken to help alleviate Gulf oil slicks and oil well fires since 15 March.

Mr. Baldry: We will endeavour to respond positively to requests we receive from the Gulf states wherever we are in a position to do so.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the Official Report, 15 March, column 1384, what response he has had from the Kuwaiti Government about Dr. Nigel Downing's proposals for protecting coral atolls.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 March 1991]: Dr. Downing's recommendations for minimising ecological damage to offshore coral reefs within the Gulf war zone have been passed both to the military authorities and, following the restoration of the Government of Kuwait, to them. I will write to the hon. Member when I have substantive news.

Local Authority Expenditure

33. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the highest, lowest and average increase in spending levels by local authorities over the three years 1988-89 to 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Comparing budgets in 1990-91 with comparable figures in 1988-89 for each local authority gives the highest increase as 320 per cent. in Labour controlled Southampton; and the lowest increase as minus 74 per cent. in Conservative controlled Runnymede.

The average increase for England as a whole is 20 per cent.

Homelessness

34. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any new proposals to deal with the shortage of hostel bed spaces for homeless people in major cities.

Sir George Young: Of the latest figures available, housing associations provide a total of 50,000 hostel bed spaces in England, of which some 20,000 are in London. The Government have allocated £96 million over three years to provide additional hostel and longer-term accommodation for single homeless people in London. We are considering how this programme might be extended to other major cities in the future.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Government's initiative on homelessness.

Sir George Young [pursuant to the reply of 22 January 1991, Official Report, column 155]: I have today approved additional allocations totalling £115 million to 106 authorities in London and the south-east. The schemes should provide more than 6,000 extra lettings for the homeless, reducing the need to use temporary bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Priority has been given to bringing empty properties back into use and cash incentive schemes. Today's announcement brings the total allocated to local authorities under the two year initiative to £227 million. Full details of individual allocations to local authorities are set out in a press release which has been placed in the Library.

Defective Property

35. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the numbers or types of property covered by the defects liability legislation.

Mr. Yeo: No. The Building Research Establishment's comprehensive study of all non-traditional house types has identified no further types which would merit designation under the housing defects legislation.

London Boroughs (Statutory Burdens)

36. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will examine the scope for additional departmental assistance to outer London boroughs incurring unavoidable additional expenditure outlays from additional statutory burdens since 1987.

Mr. Portillo: New responsibilities falling to local authorities are taken into account in the annual local authority finance settlement and are reflected in standard spending assessments for individual authorities.

For 1991-92 total standard spending assessments for outer London boroughs will increase by 21·5 per cent. and total external support by an estimated 36 per cent. including an estimated 20 per cent. in respect of the new community charge grant announced by my right hon. Friend on 19 March.

Lambeth Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to a request to meet the hon. Member for Norwood to discuss the budget, poll tax and debt write-off of Lambeth council.

Mr. Key: I have replied to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the housing investment programme allocations for Lambeth for each of the last five years; to what extent the approved programme has been achieved in Lambeth in each year; and what will be the programme for 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: The total housing capital allocations made to the London borough of Lambeth by central Government for each of the last five years are set out below. Actual expenditure on the housing investment programme is also given; this includes reinvestment of capital receipts. Copies of the council's housing strategy statements, which set out in detail the extent to which expenditure on each element of the proposed programme accorded with the council's original plans, have been placed in the Library of the House. The housing investment programme allocation for the year 1991-92 is £33·2 million—the extent to which the council will incur expenditure above this level is likely to depend on its ability to generate receipts particularly from the right to buy.

£ million	Housing capital allocations—total	Housing investment programme expenditure

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the urban aid programme allocation for Lambeth for each of the last five years; to what extent it has been taken up by Lambeth in each year; and what will be the allocation for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The following table gives full details of the London borough of Lambeth's urban programme allocation and outturn figures, excluding the DHA allocation, for the last five years, and the provisional allocation for 1991-92.

Environmental Information

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to update Pollution Paper No. 23 (1986) on "Public Access to Environmental Information."

Mr. Trippier: No. The paper was the report of an interdepartmental working party. The Government accepted its broad thrust. It also fully supports the EC directive of 7 June 1990 on freedom of access to information on the environment.

Millbank, London

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer given by the Lord President of the Council on 7 March, Official Report, columns 624-25, about the possible leasing of 7 Millbank, London SW1, for use as offices for hon. Members and staff, how many rooms are available; on what dates in 1991 the offices will become available; what rent is being requested; what length of lease is being sought; and whether any office furniture or catering facilities will be included in any deal.

Mr. Yeo: While No. 7 Millbank remains one of a number of properties under consideration there is nothing I can add usefully to the information given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Councils.

Housing

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total expenditure by his Department on publicising the Homes scheme during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; what steps he has taken to ensure that the rate of expenditure is sufficient to communicate effectively with the section of the community at which it is aimed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A major part of Homes activity is the general promotion and publicity, throughout the UK, of housing mobility and exchange schemes to local authorities and housing associations, and their tenants. Regular financial and monitoring reports on this work are submitted to the Department. In the current financial year Government funding of Homes is £1·55 million, of which £1·48 million is contributed by the Department of the Environment. £50,000 of this total budget relates specifically to the costs of publicity materials such as application forms, information leaflets and posters.

Right To Buy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses and flats were sold in Ealing in each of the past six years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Tables giving the annual total of sales for each English local authority since 1979-80 are in the Library.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet made a decision in relation to the right to buy of residents of elderly persons' dwellings at Arden close in Weston-super-Mare referred to in letters from the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare dated 6 September 1990, 4 December 1990 and 27 February 1991.

Mr. Yeo: A decision has now been made and I have written to my hon. Friend.

Nitrogen Oxide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to put in the Library the final report into evaluation of nitrogen oxide abatement technologies for large combustion plants which he anticipated receiving early in autumn 1990.

Mr. Baldry: A report on NOx abatement technologies was received by my Department late in 1990. It is still being considered.

Wandsworth (Housing)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the London borough of Wandsworth to increase the provision of low-cost housing in the borough; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My Department discusses housing policy issues each year with individual local authorities through the housing investment programme meetings. The London regional office maintains regular contact with the London borough of Wandsworth and other London authorities on all aspects of housing policy. The Housing Corporation also holds discussions about allocations under its approved development programme.

Environmental Statistics

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the next digest of environmental protection and water statistics.

Mr. Trippier: The 13th annual digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics was published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Detergents

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the study he has commissioned into the problems that may be caused by pollutants in detergents; and what further steps he intends to take.

Mr. Trippier: A report "Pollutants in Cleaning Agents" has now been received from Consultants in Environmental Sciences Ltd. and copies are being placed in the Library. We will now be consulting widely on the findings of that study.

West Yorkshire Residuary Body

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the West Yorkshire residuary body will be dissolved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The West Yorkshire body will formally be dissolved on 31 March 1991 by an order made under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985. The order transfers the remainder of the residuary body's property, functions, rights and liabilities to successor authorities. The residuary body's final report and accounts will be laid before Parliament in due course.

During the five years since abolition the record of the residuary body has been impressive. It inherited well over 25,000 property interests, as well as numerous other complex rights and liabilities from the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council. In identifying property which was surplus and successfully bringing it on to the market it showed how unused and underused public assets can be released. As a result the body has been able to distribute to the West Yorkshire districts some £50 million from surplus property sales and revenue balances for the benefit of the local charge payers. This is a remarkable achievement and much credit goes to all concerned for a job well done. I wish to pay tribute to the chairman, Sir Tom McDonald, the board members and staff for the part they have played in this highly successful operation.

All six metropolitan residuary bodies have now completed their work. This effectively draws to a close a chapter of local government re-organisation.

West Midlands Residuary Body

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the West Midlands residuary body will be dissolved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The West Midlands residuary body will formally be dissolved on 31 March 1991 by an order made under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985. The order transfers the remainder of the residuary body's property, functions, rights and liabilities to successor authorities. The residuary body's final report and accounts will be laid before Parliament in due course.

On abolition the residuary body inherited some 5,000 former county council property interests. Surplus properties of substantial value have been identified and successfully disposed of on the market while those needed for continuing functions have been transferred to the district councils. The residuary body has been able to distribute some £110 million to successors from property sales and revenue balances for the benefit of the local charge payers. It is a credit to all concerned that the residuary body's tasks have been successfully completed within the statutory timescale. I would like to pay tribute to the chairman, Sir Tom McDonald, his predecessor, Dr. Malcolm Skillcorn, the board members and the staff for their contribution to this achievement.

All six metropolitan residuary bodies have now completed their work. This effectively draws to a close a chapter of local government reorganisation.

Business Rates

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to modify the transitional arrangements for non-domestic rates.

Mr. Key: We have today issued a consultation paper on proposals which would mean that private sector companies winning contracts to carry out defined activities would, when the previous occupier of the premises was the local authority, be eligible for transitional relief under the new non-domestic rating system.

These proposals are intended to restore competitiveness for private sector companies bidding for local authority contracts under the terms of the Local Government Act 1988.

Under the present rules, transitional relief is generally lost when there is a change of occupier of a building. This means that private sector firms tendering to take over work previously done by a local authority would have to include the higher costs of the full rates bill in their bid. The new rules would put them on an equal footing.

It would not be necessary for an authority's direct services organisation to participate in the tendering process for a firm to qualify for relief, but relief would cease if there were any further change of occupation.

We would propose to introduce the necessary regulations as soon as possible after consultation. I have placed a copy of the consultation paper in the Library.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is carrying out a similar exercise and a copy of his consultation paper has also been placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of (a) unskilled, (b) semi-skilled and (c) skilled persons (i) in the entire work force and (ii) classified as unemployed in Britain; and what information he has on conparable figures in other Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development countries, showing in each case the actual figure and percentage of the total work force.

Mr. Jackson: The Great Britain labour force survey provides estimates of people in skilled occupations. Preliminary results from the 1990 labour force survey are shown in the following table:

Economically active and unemployed by social class
Great Britain, Spring 1990

	Economically active[2]		Unemployed[2]
	Thousands	Per cent.	Thousands	Per cent.
All persons[1]	28,037	100	1,869	100
Professional and Intermediate Occupations	8,283	30	187	10
Skilled Occupations	13,117	47	604	32
Partly skilled Occupations	4,315	15	300	16
Unskilled Occupations	1,373	5	133	7

[1] Includes some who did not adequately describe their occupation or who were not asked.
[2] Includes those in employment and the unemployed.

[2] The social class of the unemployed is based on their previous occupation, except for those who left their last job more than three years ago, or who have never had a job, who are not asked about their previous occupation.
Source: 1990 Labour Force Survey, preliminary results.

This does not exactly equate to skilled persons. For instance, skilled people working in unskilled occupations will be classified as unskilled. No reliable comparable figures are available for other OECD countries.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed in all aspects of paying unemployment benefit and dealing with tribunals and fraud; and how many separate premises they occupy.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed in (a) unemployment benefit offices, (b) job centres, (c) the Training Agency and (d) the remainder of his Department; and how many separate buildings are occupied for each.

Mr. Jackson: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested. As at 1 January 1991 there were 26,040 people employed in the Employment Service local office network which comprises unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres. There were 990 staff employed in the training, enterprise and education directorate, formerly the Training Agency headquarters, and 8,266 in the ED headquarters regions, formerly the Training Agency regions. There were 14,909 staff employed in the remainder of the ED group.

There are 676 buildings occupied by unemployment benefit offices, 680 by jobcentres and 300 by integrated offices. There are 107 buildings occupied by TEED and ED headquarters regional offices. The remainder of the ED group occupies 282 buildings.

Employment Training, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to enable Bradford and District training and enterprise council to assist the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders employment training centre in Bradford to continue; how many trainees are currently receiving training at NACRO in Bradford; what training is available; what alternative training will be offered to NACRO trainees if the Bradford centre closes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The responsibility for identifying and meeting local training and enterprise needs in Bradford rests with Bradford and District training and enterprise council. It is for Bradford TEC to use its resources to decide which organisations it contracts with to ensure that these needs are met, and I cannot intervene in their contracting decisions.

NACRO in Bradford provides employment training in clerical, secretarial and elementary occupations, and also initial training via a subcontractor. As at 1 March 1991, 79 ET trainees were in training.

Bradford and District TEC has offered NACRO three contract closure options. NACRO has expressed a preference for a residual contract to 30 June 1991 at new funding rates and are currently giving this further consideration. This would enable most trainees to complete their ET with NACRO.

There are many other local training providers offering similar training to that provided by NACRO. Bradford and District TEC will seek to minimise any disruption caused to those trainees who are required to transfer to another training provider to complete their training.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the report by the Robens Institute at Surrey university into accidents in the youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have placed a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

We have recently been given further attention to the needs of trainees in the new training environment created by the advent of training and enterprise councils, and other initiatives such as the introduction of employment training, youth training and training credits.

Our policy for the health and safety of trainees has been in place for a number of years, as the youth opportunities programme and youth training schemes followed by ET and YT, have evolved. The foundations of this policy are that the primary legal and moral responsibility for the health, safety and welfare of trainees rests with those who are providing the training, whether in a college or in the workplace. To this end we have provided in the Health and Safety (Training for Employment) Regulations 1990 for unemployed trainees in training with an employer to have the same legal protection under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act as they would if they were employees. The Government will use their best endeavours to ensure that those responsible for arranging and delivering training understand their obligations and are given appropriate help and support in carrying them out.

It is our aim to promote quality training programmes which enjoy the full confidence of the public. This includes firm policies for accident prevention and occupational health protection. As part of the training objective we aim to provide each trainee with health and safety skills and knowledge which they can carry forward into their working life.

Through their contracts with my Department TECs are contractually bound to have satisfactory systems to ensure their providers and their sub-contractors have adequate health and safety arrangements. My Department, through its regional offices, appraises TEC proposals in these respects and monitors performance when contracts are signed. To enhance the ability of the regional offices to perform this task their professional resources—regional safety advisers—are being strengthened overall.

We are also embarking on a range of other new measures. The existing publications and training materials provided by the Department are being reviewed, evaluated and then revised to provide relevant and up-to-date support and guidance to trainers and trainees alike. Gaps in existing provision will be identified and new products developed.

For TECs we will be examining a targeted approach to their health and safety activities. Our aim is to establish standards to which they can work and by which their performance can be measured.

With the Health and Safety Executive we will be looking at the consequences of coming European Community legislation for health and safety training and the health and safety content of national vocational qualifications.

Finally, taking into account the recommendations of the Robens Institute report a working group including representative of TECs is looking at the need of accident data collection in relation to employment training and youth training in the TEC era.

Altogether this represents a very considerable commitment of public resources to the health and safety of trainees.

Volunteer Centre UK

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Volunteer Centre UK to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. John Patten: I am glad to lend my support to such an exhibition, which will encourage attention to the value of volunteering and to the contribution which the Volunteer Centre UK makes in promoting it. I understand that the exhibition will take place from 24 to 28 June and I look forward to visiting it.

Legislation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the differences between the legislation in force in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) England and Wales with respect to (i) the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, (ii) the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and (iii) codes of practice made under these Acts, and similar legislation applying to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 extends to the whole of the United Kingdom with the exception of the provisions listed in section 28(2) of the Act. The differences between the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 were set out in the explanatory document to the 1989 order, a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member in July 1988. The main difference between the four codes of practice issued under article 65 of the 1989 order and the four codes issued under section 66 of the 1984 Act which came into force in England and Wales on 1 January 1986 is that the Northern Ireland codes of practice do not apply to the exercise of powers conferred by or under the Prevention of Terrorism Act or to arrest or detention under that Act. In addition, the Northern Ireland code C for the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers reflects the provisions of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 which has no equivalent in England and Wales.

Business Corruption

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory provisions that relate to the offer of corrupt inducements to employees.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales the principal legislative provisions relating to the bribery of employees are the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act 1889 and the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1906 and 1916. Bribery of a public official is also an offence at common law.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to business corruption.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any new appointments have been made to the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Miss Beryl Wallis, who retired from a senior post in IBM United Kingdom Ltd. in February 1991, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the Police Complaints Authority. She will take up her post on 29 April 1991.

Brigadier Anthony Vivian, who was until 4 March 1990 colonel of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, has accepted my invitation to serve as a member of the Police Complaints Authority. He will take up his post on 2 April 1991.

Forensic Science Agency

Sir Gerrard Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards establishing the forensic science service as an executive agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to announce that the Forensic Science Service will be established on 1 April 1991 as an executive agency of the Home Office. The FSS plays a vital role in the administration of justice principally by providing scientific support in the investigation of crime and expert evidence to the courts.

From 1 April the FSS will recover its full costs through charging its customers direct for the services it provides. In preparation for this the FSS last year made substantial changes in its organisation and style of operation. Agency status will give the FSS the managerial and financial freedom it needs to continue improving its efficiency and effectiveness thereby giving its customers better value for money. It will also enable the FSS to maintain its high standards of scientific work and quality. I have set the agency challenging performance targets including recovery of full costs, a unit cost of £579·50 and a unit cost productivity gain of 1·75 per cent. in 1991-92.

I have appointed Dr. Janet Thompson, the director general of the FSS, as its first chief executive. Details of the principles by which the FSS will operate are set out in the framework document, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Passport Department

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards establishing the passport department as an executive agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to announce that the passport department of the Home Office will be established as an executive agency on 2 April. The full title of the agency will be the United Kingdom Passport Agency. I shall be placing a copy of the agency's framework document in the Library.

The main aim of the passport agency will be to provide passport services to British nationals promptly and economically. The agency will be starting from a sound base in fulfilling this aim. I am confident that the enhanced freedoms and responsibilities which the framework document grants to it will enable it to deliver further improvements in its service to customers while providing better value for money.

The key targets which I have set the agency for its first year of operation are:

(i) to reduce the time taken to process properly completed, straightforward applications to a maximum of 20 working days in the period of peak demand from January to July and to a maximum of 10 working days at other times.

(ii) to reduce unit costs by at least 2·3 per cent. in real terms.

The chief executive will be directly accountable to me for the performance of the passport agency. An advisory board including two private sector members with experience of delivering services to the public will help me to assess the agency's performance.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum, by nationality, were made (a) on entry and (b) after entry to the United Kingdom in each month since June 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The readily available information is given in the following table. Some of the figures for 1990 will understate because of delays in recording. Reliable figures for the fourth quarter of 1990 are not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing how many cattle in the past three years have been certified as suffering from BSE; of these how many were (a) cows of generally recognised milk breeds and (b) cows of generally recognised beef breeds; how many of the cows in each case were (i) under three years old, (ii) between three and six years old, (iii) between six and nine years old and (iv) over nine years; and how many cattle so certified were (1) maiden heifers of milk breeds, (2) maiden heifers of beef breeds, (3) bulls (A) under and (B) over three years, (4) steers and (5) calves.

Mr. Maclean: From when the disease was first identified in November 1986 up to and including 18 March 1991 the total number of confirmed cases of BSE in the United Kingdom was 25,826. Out of these, 24 were in cattle whose dams were themselves affected and 23 of these were born before the introduction, in July 1988, of the ban on the feeding of ruminant protein to ruminants, and were exposed to a source of food-borne infection. The single remaining case was born in November 1988, after the imposition of the feed ban. This one animal should not have been fed on ruminant-derived protein and its feeding regime, and other possible sources of infection, are being investigated. The possibility of maternal transmission is one that will have to be examined.

In a MAFF research project studying under controlled conditions 316 calves of cows affected with BSE, no animal has yet succumbed to BSE, even though 262 of them are older than the single case already mentioned. Even if this were a case of maternal transmission, it would have no significance for public health. The measures taken to deal with BSE (the slaughter and destruction of suspect animals, and a ban on the use for human or animal consumption of those tissues that might harbour the agent in pre-clinical cases) apply in all cases, regardless of how infection might have been acquired. The only significance for animal health might be that if maternal transmission were found to occur in some cases, eradication of BSE might take rather longer than would otherwise be the case. This was a point addressed by Dr. David Tyrell in his advice to the Government. He concluded that no Government action was necessary to control the use for breeding of the offspring of cattle affected by BSE.

Cereals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of (a) wheat and (b) all cereals produced in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the EEC, (iii) north America, and (iv) the rest of the world has been used in each year since 1979 (1) for human consumption, (2) for animal feed, (3) for other processes, and (4) destroyed; and if he will give these figures as a percentage of world production in each case.

Mr. Curry: The information, where readily available, is shown in the tables, the coverage of which varies according to sources. No information is available on the destruction of grain, but data on losses are shown where recorded. Information on the rest of the world as a whole is not readily available in the form requested.

Water Supplies, Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance scientists from his Department are offering to Kuwait to (a) seal off chemicals from bombed chemical plants to prevent them from getting into the water table, (b) mitigate the effects of faecal-oral infection from damaged sewerage systems and (c) restore irrigation and water course systems damaged by military action in the Gulf war.

Mr. Curry: We have had no requests from Gulf states for assistance with these matters. The requests the Government have received have focused on the priority tasks of tackling oil and atmospheric pollution and we have of course responded urgently and positively by providing manpower, equipment and funds. The Government are also ready to help in identifying appropriate United Kingdom science expertise in relation to Gulf environmental problems.

EC Food Surpluses

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make his policy to ensure that the EC food mountains are redistributed to those in need, particularly in the third world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The European Community sends surplus food as short-term aid to famine areas, but it is often more cost effective to purchase food supplies from sources nearby. In the longer term, food aid is not an effective solution to food shortages, as it can hinder the development of local food production by depressing agricultural markets and increasing demand for imported products. The Government's policy is to supply cash, expertise, machinery and seeds to developing countries in order to improve their ability to feed themselves. The Government are also committed to securing overall reductions in the level of support and protection for Community agriculture, which would be of benefit to development countries.

Manpower Statistics

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the changes in the manpower numbers and manpower costs that are expected for each of the directorate of fisheries research, the sea fisheries inspectorate and the marine environmental protection division, and the reasons for those changes, between 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

	1989-90	1990-91[1]	1991-92[2]
(a) Directorate of fisheries research
(i) Average staff-in-post	423·5	417	419
(ii) Total pay costs £'000	6,425	7,032	7,736
(b) Sea fisheries inspectorate
(i) Average staff-in-post	92	96	99
(ii) Total pay costs £'000	1,228	1,401	1,636
(c) Marine environmental protection division
(i) Average staff-in-post	20	22·5	23
(ii) Total pay costs £'000	327	411	439

[1] Estimate.
[2] Forecast.

Variations in numbers of staff in post in the directorate and inspectorate reflect in the main difficulties in recruitment of staff to fill vacancies. Additional staff were appointed to the marine environmental protection division to ensure effective administration of licensing controls.

Waste (Sea Disposal)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what cost increase identified in his recent departmental audit will be reflected in increased fees charged for work connected with the licensing of the sea disposal of waste.

Mr. Curry: A departmental audit showed that departmental overhead expenditure had not hitherto been fully reflected in standard departmental costs used in the calculation of all its chargeable operations including licence fees for sea disposal. Necessary changes in central London accommodation also served to increase overheads.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reasons he has for assuming 8 per cent. inflation for the fiscal year 1991-92 when assessing fees charged for work connected with the licensing of the sea disposal of waste.

Mr. Curry: The 8 per cent. figure was not intended to be a forecast of the general rate of inflation over the coming year. It is a planning figure which the Department has used as a realistic estimate of the likely increase in the cost of certain elements, including pay costs, which are included in the calculations of our fees for sea disposal licences.

Nobel House

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reason for moving part of the Ministry from Great Westminster house to Nobel house, including the cost effects of that move.

Mr. Curry: The move of some 1,100 staff of this Ministry from Great Westminster house at the end of 1988 was necessary because the lease had expired and the building was to be demolished. For reasons of working efficiency it was decided that the displaced staff should be rehoused in central London reasonably close to our Whitehall offices. The only suitable accommodation which the PSA were able to provide was in Nobel house and part of the adjacent building, Ergon house.

The costs falling to this Ministry for refurbishment, construction and fitting out of both buildings, which was managed by the PSA, totalled approximately £14 million, with a further £484,000 for IT cabling and £97,000 for removals. Annual accommodation charges increased by some £5 million from the relatively low level the Ministry was paying for poor quality accommodation on a long lease. This is offset to a degree by a significant decrease in maintenance and fuel and utilities costs.

Horticulture Research International

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 21 March, if he will list the sources and amounts of funding of Horticulture Research International; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Horticulture Research International is funded by its annual research commissions with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, grant in aid from the Agricultural and Food Research Council, and research contracts with a range of customers including the United Kingdom horticulture industry. In 1991-92 this funding is expected to amount to some £12·7 million, £3·0 million, and £2·9 million respectively.

Sheep Variable Premium

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the future of the sheep variable premium scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The reformed EC sheepmeat regime adopted in 1989 provided for sheep variable premium, which operates in Great Britain only, to be phased out by the end of the 1992 marketing year at the latest. In the negotiations on the review of the regime the United Kingdom secured the right to end the scheme before that date. Last summer, Ministers decided that variable premium should continue to operate in 1991 but that the arrangements for 1992 should be reviewed early in 1991.

My right hon. Friend and I have now carried out that review, taking account of the views of interested parties. In the light of comments received and the experience of the phasing out process so far, we have concluded that the sheep variable premium should be terminated at the end of the 1991 marketing year.

With the ending of variable premium, support to producers in Great Britain under the sheep regime will switch entirely to the sheep annual premium, which will no longer suffer a reduction to take account of variable premium. At the same time the clawback charge on exports of lamb from Great Britain to the rest of the Community will be abolished. From then on support in Great Britain will be on the same basis as in Northern Ireland and the rest of the European Community with a unified system for calculating sheep premium applying in all member states.

The Government are announcing the end of variable premium well in advance of the effective date to remove uncertainty about the future arrangements and to allow all concerned time to adjust to the new circumstances that will apply from the beginning of the 1992 marketing year. Sheep producers will then have the opportunity and challenges of a more open market. I am sure they will respond with the quality produce which makes British lamb such an excellent product.

Scrapie

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is a vaccine available for the prevention of scrapie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 25 and 26 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

Discussion concentrated on the Commission's proposals for the 1991 price fixing. Most member states argued that the agricultural guideline should be increased purportedly to take account of German unification. This would allow for a laxer settlement and temporarily enable the Council to avoid some of the difficult issues. I argued strongly, with support from my Netherlands colleague, that the major problems stemmed from market imbalance in several sectors and that these should be addressed as a matter of urgency, so that a decision fully compatible with the guideline could be reached. The Commission also remained firmly of this view.

I also argued that substantial steps should be taken towards eliminating monetary compensatory amounts by adjusting green currencies, including the full alignment of the rate for the green pound. This is necessary to allow the single market to function effectively and to ensure fair competition between producers and traders in all member states.

I also raised the continuing problem of low-priced imports of soft fruit from eastern Europe. Despite initial hesitations the Commission indicated that they would extend the present safeguard measures until 31 July.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of his departmental investigations into friendly fire incidents between allied troops in the Gulf war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes, when our investigations are complete.

Northern Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the firms employed to transport by sea, ammunition, explosives and detonators to the Army in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For reasons of operational security it is not the practice to disclose the arrangements for transporting ammunition and similar items to Northern Ireland.

Rainfall

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what was the measurement of rainfall during the 24 hours at (a) Ballycastle district on 27-28 October 1990 and (b) Strangford lough area on 5-6 January.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the 24-hour period starting 0900 on 27 October 1990, 72·8mm of rainfall was recorded at Ballycastle Glenowen and 71·5mm at Ballycastle Magherintemple. In the 24-hour period starting 0900 on 5 January 1991, 12·8mm of rainfall was recorded at Hare island, in the Strangford area.

Territorial Army

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers commanding officers in Territorial Army units have (a) currently and (b) as envisaged under the new management strategy to appoint and dismiss civilian employees such as secretaries, clerks and storemen; and whether under NMS such commanding officers will be allowed to transfer funds between civilian posts and other options, such as buying secretarial services from an agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently, commanding officers of Territorial Army units may appoint industrial employees only within complement and funding limits. No powers of dismissal are delegated below rank of Colonel. No change in these personnel management arrangements is planned under NMS, but funds may be transferred by a budget holder between a range of resources to enable a service to be provided in the most efficient manner. Commanding officers of Territorial Army units will not be budget holders under NMS and will not, therefore, have powers to transfer funds.

HMS Endurance

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with regard to the programming and design for the replacement of HMS Endurance; when the relevant studies commenced; and when is it expected that a definitive conclusion will be reached.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Studies into the requirement for replacing HMS Endurance commenced last year and are continuing.

RAF Waddington

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints have been received by the base commander at RAF Waddington in Lincolnshire about noise; and what action has been taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently RAF Waddington does not house any operational squadrons and therefore receives only occasional noise complaints. Each complaint is dealt with as appropriate to the particular case.

Plymouth (Empty Properties)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's residential properties are empty within the city of Plymouth; for how long they have been empty; and whether he will transfer them to the local authority or housing association for local use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, 406 married quarters and 11 Ministry of Defence civilian properties in the Plymouth area were vacant. Of the married quarters 29 had been vacant for over a year and 377 for under a year; of the civilian properties seven had been vacant for over six months and four for less than six months. In addition, 275 dwellings were in the process of being sold. Not all empty properties are surplus to requirements, many are either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some are already allotted to service families who are due to move in shortly and others are being considered for disposal. Surplus dwellings are normally offered for sale to service personnel through the services' discount scheme or sold by competitive tender. It is therefore not possible to transfer empty dwellings to local authorities or housing associations.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department was informed of the leak of Zenon 133 from the nuclear test conducted by the United Kingdom in Nevada in November 1990; what reporting arrangements exist with the United States authorities to inform Her Majesty's Government of radioactive releases from British tests; and what health dangers were posed arising from the leak.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have recently ascertained that there was an extremely minor leak of radioactive gas from the joint UK-US Houston nuclear test carried out at the Nevada test site in November 1990. All information which the MOD receives on such tests is channelled through the United States department of energy in Washington DC. The release posed no danger to the health of people either on or off the site.

Directorate-General of Military Survey

Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the directorate-general of military survey is to become a defence support agency as foreshadowed in his statement to the House on 18 October 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military survey will become a defence support agency (DSA) on 1 April 1991. Its first chief executive will be Major-General R. Wood.

Military survey is an integral part of the Ministry of Defence and will continue to act as the MOD's specialist authority on all geographic support matters, other than hydrographic aspects. Geographic support embraces the provision of maps, surveys and other geographical materials as well as direct support in the field, and technical services and advice, all of which are essential to the capability of the armed forces to plan, train and fight.

The agency will seek to achieve progressive improvements in operational effectiveness, standards of service, quality, cost effectiveness and efficiency. The chief executive has initially been set the following key performance objectives:

Delivery of the programme

1. To meet 95 per cent. of the agreed targets for geographic support commitments, production, development and training in 1991-92 to timescale, quantity and standard.

2. To maintain the operational effectiveness of all military survey units to the required Army standards.

3. To develop and introduce by 1 April 1992:
   (a) improved customer/supplier procedures;
   (b) improved procedures for costing products and services;

and thereafter to meet progressively more demanding annual targets for geographic support, production, development and training for future years to timescale, quantity, standard and cost.

Use of resources

4. To achieve outturn within the agreed annual cash budget allocation, subject to agreed carry over flexibilities.

5. To achieve a 1·5 per cent. increase in efficiency in 1991-92, and to develop plans to achieve future improvements in efficiency which meet targets set by the MOD.

6. To develop and introduce progressively total quality practices designed to improve efficiency in all areas of DSA activity.

Management systems

7. To review the management structure of the agency and to implement appropriate changes by 1 April 1992.

8. To review future requirements for management information and accounting systems and to prepare an implementation plan by 1 April 1992.

9. To produce and develop a corporate plan, and to produce an annual management plan covering year 1 in detail and years 2-4 in outline.

The Gulf

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress of the withdrawal of British forces from the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: We do not intend to retain a permanent ground force capability in the area. The withdrawal of our forces is well under way, and by the end of this week some 28,000 out of 45,000 will have returned to the United Kingdom and Germany. We expect the main withdrawals to be completed by mid-April. Up to 5,000 personnel are being deployed to Saudi Arabia to manage the return of equipment and stores to the United Kingdom and Germany. This is likely to take a number of months to complete. The remaining elements of 4 Brigade are operating as a battlegroup. While their equipment is in the Gulf and we review progress towards a formal ceasefire, we shall deploy some 1,500 personnel to replace those in this battlegroup and take advantage of training opportunities. My expectation is that the battle group will not remain beyond June.

A squadron of GR1 Tornados will also remain in Bahrain for the time being. The Armilla patrol will continue to provide a frigate/destroyer presence in the region; and a number of mine counter-measures vessels will also remain, to contribute to multinational mine clearance operations, for about six months.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 28 March 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if it is his policy to propose a freeze on the upper limits of capital and income beyond which an applicant is not eligible for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: No. It is not the Lord Chancellor's policy to freeze the upper limits of capital and income for legal aid eligibility. The Lord Chancellor is conducting a full review of the financial conditions for legal aid. The first stage of the review, covering civil, non-matrimonial legal aid is nearing completion. A consultation paper will be issued containing proposals aimed at targeting legal aid to need and final decisions will be made in the light of the response to this paper.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General why West Midlands police officers were taking statements regarding the Birmingham pub bombings case in 1987.

The Attorney-General: The West Midlands police took statements in respect of the Birmingham pub bombings case in 1987 at the request of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals (Live Exports)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on progress being made in current EC negotiations to maintain adequate control and protection for the exportation of live horses and ponies after 1992;

(2) what further representations he has had on the need to maintain existing controls on the exportation of live horses and ponies after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government continue to receive many representations on this subject. In the Community negotiations, which are still at an early stage, the Government will continue to press for the continuation of controls which prevent the export of horses for slaughter.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he now intends to take prosecutions under the Pesticides (Maximum Residue Levels in Food) Regulations 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Prosecutions will be taken under the regulations when appropriate.

Voluntary Organisations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the voluntary organisations to which he has given grant aid, including the amounts given in each case, in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is fully committed to encouraging the work done by the voluntary sector and regularly reviews the grant aid given to voluntary organisations. For 1989-90 and 1990-91 the following organisations benefited by the amounts shown:

	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
Dartington Institute (Project Silvanus)	11,000	6,250
Farming and Wildlife Trust	16,000	36,000
National Federation of Young Farmers Clubs	18,500	18,962
National Proficiency Tests Council	72,670	115,800
RURAL (Responsible Use of Resources in Agriculture and on the Land)	2,000	2,000

Orange Juice

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries of origin of the orange juice samples which were subjected to laboratory analysis for sugar content; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to list the countries of origin.

The labelling of most of the juices analysed in the recent Ministry survey either stated that the juice came from more than one country or did not indicate the country of origin.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take against the suppliers of the orange juice found to breach the Fruit Juice and Nectar Regulations 1977; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The recently reported MAFF survey of orange juice on the United Kingdom market was for surveillance purposes only. Further sampling in compliance with consumer protection law has been carried out, and investigations are continuing.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 13 March, Official Report, column 570, whether he intends to exhume the bodies of the BSE-confirmed cattle that were buried in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Eggs

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further plans he has to restrict the import of non-salmonella tested eggs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: There are no restrictions on imports from other Member States, but all consignments of eggs imported into the United Kingdom are tested for salmonella enteritidis.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any conditions for the payment of grants to Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college will be placed on the trustees of the Robert Aske's charity.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 188, what exact variations from the terms of paragraph 9 of the model CTC/CCTA funding agreement he has included in his agreement to fund the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college;

(2) if he will provide a list of all variations and amendments from the model CTC/CCTA funding agreement placed in the Library on 31 October 1990 which have been included in his agreement to fund the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college.

Mr. Eggar: The agreement between the Secretary of State and the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham College Trust contains a number of minor variations from the model agreement relating to the special circumstances of this project.

In paragraph 1, the entry into force of the agreement is made conditional upon the grant of a 99-year lease to the CTC by the Haberdasher's Company, as trustee of the Robert Aske's charity, in a form to be agreed with the Secretary of State.

Paragraphs 8ii and iii provide that the CTC's contribution to the capital costs of establishing the college shall be the value of a 99-year lease of the site of the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham boys' and girls' schools, and 8ii incorporates a mechanism for agreeing the value. Paragraph 8v provides for the Secretary of State's share of the actual costs to be reduced by the amount of difference between the cash limit and the actual costs, if the capital costs finally incurred in establishing the CTC are less than the cash limit.

In paragraph 9, the words

"not be expected to exceed the proportion mentioned in paragraph 8iii" in line 11 of paragraph 9 have been amended to read

"in no circumstances be expected to exceed 80 per cent.".

Similarly, the words

"the first percentage referred to in paragraph 8iii"

in the penultimate line of the same paragraph have been amended to read "80 per cent.".

There are no other changes of substance.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applicants of each sex and from different ethnic groups there were for places in the first year group the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college beginning in September 1991; and how many applicants of either sex and from different ethnic groups have now been offered places at the college.

Mr. Eggar: The college received a total of 830 applications. Of those interviewed, on observation, the ethnic groupings appeared to be:

57 asian
183 afro-caribbean
280 white
47 other.

Of the 90 girls and 90 boys offered places the ethnic groupings, based on the earlier observation, are:

22 asian
40 afro-caribbean
99 white
19 other.

Sports and Arts Foundation

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many meetings, and over what time scale, Ministers and officials from his Department held with representatives of the pools companies to discuss the establishing of a new foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Atkins: No such meetings were held. As the proposals involved a reduction in pool betting duty, the meetings were with Ministers and officials from Her Majesty's Treasury.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what criteria he has applied to decide whether adult education centres run by local authorities should be included in his proposals to change the status of further education colleges so that they come under a funding council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria he has applied to decide whether colleges of higher education run by local authorities should be included in his proposals to change the status of further education colleges so that they come under a funding council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in his statement to the House on 21 March, the Government propose that all further education colleges offering full-time education should be taken out of local authority control. Most of these colleges make provision for adults, and some offer courses of higher education.

Arrangements for funding and administering education for adults, both within and outside the new sector, will be discussed in the forthcoming White Paper.

Science Budget

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's Government will be responding to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology report on the science budget 1991-92.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the report and will respond in due course.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has now considered the views expressed by the local authority employers, teacher unions and others on his proposals following the fourth report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: After careful consideration of the representations I have received I have decided to accept the recommendations contained in the fourth report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions, but to stage their introduction over the period up to 1 December 1991.

Drafts of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1991, an order which gives effect to this document, and a circular to local education authorities and others, are being sent to the relevant local authority associations, teachers' unions and bodies representing the interests of the governors of voluntary schools and grant-maintained schools inviting their comments by Monday 22 April.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Estuaries

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will designate the seven estuaries in Northern Ireland as special protection areas to protect habitats and to safeguard wildlife.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland intends to designate those estuaries which are most significant in terms of their bird populations as special protection areas under the terms of the European Community directive on the conservation of wild birds. Surveying and assessment is proceeding. However, I am not yet in a position to give a precise timetable for the appropriate designations.

Civil Service

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to recruit women and members of ethnic minorities in the top grades of employment at his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: The home civil service and the Northern Ireland civil service are fully committed to ensuring equality of opportunity for all applicants including women and ethnic minorities. Both civil services are equal opportunities employers and this is emphasised fully in all the recruiting campaigns and advertising.

If direct recruitment for certain senior posts in the Northern Ireland Office were to be necessary, it would be conducted with guidance from the Civil Service Commission.

Within Northern Ireland itself religion is a more significant equality of opportunity consideration than ethnic origin. Consequently the Northern Ireland civil service commissioners have not taken any specific action to recruit members of ethnic minorities in top grades of employment nor have they any plans to do so. Their advertisements, however, state that applications are welcome for men and women.

Pensioners' Day Centre, Belvoir

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members there are in the Wednesday day centre for pensioners in the community centre at Belvoir estate, Castlereagh borough; how many new members were approved in the past 12 months; how many applications to join the club are under consideration; and what effort is made to make the existence of this club known to pensioners living in Belvoir and district.

Mr. Hanley: At present there are a total of 43 people on the attendance roll of the centre with an average weekly attendance of 39. Five people applied for membership during the last 12 months and three of these have already been placed at the centre and can be offered a place. Two people are currently being considered for membership.

The pensioners in the area are made aware of the club's existence by current members, and social work and community nursing staff. It is also promoted through the East Belfast and Castlereagh Senior Citizens Amalgam.

Social Fund

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each Department of Health and Social Security office in Northern Ireland for the last two years and the current year and how many (a) crisis loans and (b) budgeting loans were (i) applied for in writing and (ii) applied for, or requested verbally, and in each case (1) refused, or, (2) granted; and how many budgeting loans were paid and how many were offered to applicants in lieu of a crisis loan.

Mr. Hanley: Information about the number of budgeting loans and crisis loans processed each month, the number awarded and the amount paid for each social security office is available in the Library. The number of applications refused can be derived from these figures. Other information about the method of application and the number of loans offered to applicants in lieu of crisis loans is not available.

Ulster Savings

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Ulster Savings.

Dr. Mawhinney: As part of a programme of policy evaluation a review of Ulster Savings was commissioned in 1989 by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Having given careful consideration to the findings of the review, I have decided that with effect from 1 June 1991 no new investment will be accepted in Ulster Savings although existing investments and provisions for reinvestment will be maintained. The Department for National Savings has agreed that with effect from 1 June it will market national savings certificates in Northern Ireland through the Post Office.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) the total amount to be rebated to ratepayers in Northern Ireland as a consequence of the announcement by his right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding reduced local government taxation, 19 March, Official Report, column 180, (b) the average sum for each domestic property in Northern Ireland, (c) the sum for each elector in Northern Ireland and (d) what sum £140 per elector in Northern Ireland represents.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 March 1991]: The information is as follows:

(a) The total reduction in domestic rates in Northern Ireland is £73·23 million.

(b) This represents an average reduction per ratepayer of approximately £127.

(c) The sum per elector in Northern Ireland is approximately £65.

(d) The sum of £140 per elector in Northern Ireland would amount to £159 million approximately.

With regard to (c) and (d) it should be noted that there is no precise analogy between the adjustments in Great Britain and Northern Ireland because of the different financing regimes and the markedly different degree of existing central Government support. In neither case is the reduction in the burden of local finance related directly to the number of electors and the above figures are no basis for comparisons.

WALES

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most recent information for the total number of local authority dwellings which are vacant in Wales; if he will list these for the period of (a) under three weeks, (b) four to six weeks, (c) seven weeks to six months, (d) seven months to one year and (e) over one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 3 December 1990. The following information updates and revises this answer.

Open Heart Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 177, when the central collection of statistics on number of open heart surgery cases carried out in Wales was started in the form used in his answer.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Open heart surgery in the NHS in Wales is provided by South Glamorgan health authority. Reflecting the central funding of the authority to provide the service, information on the number of operations carried out has been routinely collected by the Welsh Office since 1984, supplementary to the hospital activity analysis data provided by district health authorities.

Railways

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to improve the rail infrastructure of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Improvement of rail infrastructure is essentially a matter for British Rail. However, my predecessors and I have given credit approvals to fund capital investment by Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan county councils in the valleys rail network.

Health Authorities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of health authorities in Wales have interests in property development and in business generally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department does not seek information about the commercial interests of members when making appointments. However, the Regional and Distict Health Authorities (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 require a chairman or member to disclose any pecuniary interest in any contract, proposed contract or other matter under discussion at a meeting and in general preclude the chairman or member from taking any further active part in the related debate or decisions.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much health authority property has been sold in each of the health authorities in Wales in each of the years from 1980 to 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not immediately available in the form requested, but the table details the amount of NHS land sold in each DHA from 1980 to 1990.

Green Belt Legislation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish a green belt Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Green belts are established through development plans. The Assembly of Welsh Counties has accepted my invitation to look at the role green belts might play in the planning and development of Wales, as part of the review of strategic planning guidance. I expect to receive a report from the assembly later in the spring, which will inform my consideration of the need to issue further advice on the subject.

Parking Offences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parking tickets were received and paid by his Department in each year since 1988 in respect of official vehicles.

Mr. David Hunt: One in 1990.

Company Takeovers

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh companies have been bought by European companies and how many by other overseas companies in each of the last two years.

Mr. David Hunt: Information known to Welsh Development International on acquisitions of companies with operations in Wales is as follows: in 1989, four acquisitions by companies based elsewhere in Europe and three by companies based in other countries; in 1990, four acquisitions by companies based elsewhere in Europe and 10 by companies based in other countries.

Environmental Health Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many environmental health officers have been employed by local authorities in Wales for each year since 1980.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of local authority non-manual staff employed in environmental health in Wales for each of the last 10 years is given in the table. It is not possible to identify separately the number of environmental health officers included in this category.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 13 March, Official Report, columns 529-30 whether he intends to exhume the bodies of the BSE confirmed cattle that were buried in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Nurse Gradings

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each health authority area in Wales (a) the number of appeals that have been submitted to his Department by nursing staff disputing the grade to which they have been assigned, (b) the number of those appeals that have been determined, (c) the number of appeals that have been successful, (d) the mean median and modal times taken for those appeals to be determined and (e) the number of appeals that have been withdrawn.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Relevant numbers of nurse clinical grading appeals made at the all-Wales level to the Welsh appeals committee for each health authority are as shown in the following table:

Health authority	Valid appeals lodged	Appeals subsequently withdrawn	Appeals held	Successful appeals
Clwyd	75	4	12	—
East Dyfed	82	1	8	—
Gwent	258	2	6	3
Gwynedd	288	48	59	16

Health authority	Valid appeals lodged	Appeals subsequently withdrawn	Appeals held	Successful appeals

South Glamorgan	200	9	23	—
West Glamorgan	129	1	24	2
WALES TOTALS	1,406	67	151	34

The time taken to process an appeal depends crucially upon the provision of documentation from both staff organisations and management and upon the availability of representatives of both sides to act as panel members. Having regard to postponement and adjournments, the calculation of an average process time would not be meaningful.

Councils (Dissolution)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the subject of the dissolution of Welsh town and community councils; and if he will indicate the nature of those representations.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have received a number of letters expressing concern. Questions have been submitted by hon. Members, and my right hon. Friend has met the hon. Gentleman and representatives of the community council associations.

Minor Works Grant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of persons currently eligible for minor works grant who will lose their eligibility for such grant by virtue of the new poll tax reduction scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not held centrally.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year from 1967-68 to 1991-92 the aggregate grant percentage for rate/revenue support grant.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 14 March 1991 by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State. Information on a consistent basis is not available before 1981-82.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis showing in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 for each Welsh local authority and for Wales as a whole (a) the total standard spending and standard spending assessment, (b) the total standard spending and standard spending assessment expressed as pounds per capita, pounds per adult and pounds per community charge unit, (c) the community charge required to be levied to finance standard spending assessment, (d) the 'long-run' community charge required to be levied to finance standard spending assessment, (e) the 'long-run' community charge required to be levied to finance expenditure 1 to 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. below and 1 to 5 and 10 per cent. above standard spending assessment, (f) the proportion of expenditure which would be financed by Government grant at each of the spending levels specified in (e), (g) the level of expenditure as a proportion of standard spending assessment which would require a zero community charge and (h) that level of expenditure as a percentage of standard spending assessment which would require a zero 'long-run' community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

A465

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current planned date for commencement for the A465 scheme between Aberdulais and Glynneath.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 1991 supplement to "Roads in Wales" published in February shows the scheme as planned to start in the short term, that is, before April 1994.

Earlswood Roundabout, Swansea

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when and what short-term measures are to be introduced to deal with the long delays experienced by traffic leaving Swansea at the Earlswood roundabout.

Mr. David Hunt: Delays due to the construction of the Earlswood to Lonlas section of the M4 have now been overcome. Earlswood roundabout itself is, however, a source of delay and it is being kept under study in conjunction with the Baglan and Briton Ferry roundabouts, which have already been improved.

It is intended that by 1993 Earlswood roundabout will have part-time traffic signals and will be redesigned to provide better traffic flow.

Youth Training

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the level and quality of youth training opportunities in Rhymney valley.

Mr. David Hunt: It is the responsibility of the Mid Glamorgan training and enterprise council to ensure that good quality youth training opportunities are provided at a level sufficient for the needs and circumstances of the Rhymney valley.

Prince of Wales Hospital, Rhydlafar

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect of the closure of the children's ward at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, Cardiff, on the quality of facilities and treatment for children with orthopaedic ailments in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: South Glamorgan health authority has assured my right hon. Friend that the transfer of the children's orthopaedic facility at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, to the Cardiff royal infirmary should enhance the service available to children in Wales. It points out that the infirmary is the main centre for trauma and orthopaedic care in the district. As such, it has a supporting academic department, and on-site access to a wide range of support and diagnostic facilities, including the most modern body-scanning technology in Wales.

The health authority also emphasise the benefits, in safety terms, of having anaesthetic cover and emergency services on site.

Furthermore, the children involved will be accommodated in the authority's most recently upgraded and modernised children's ward. This includes a range of cubicles and bedded areas, together with a separate unit for teenagers, a children's play area, purpose-built accommodation for parents and a well-established ward-based educational service.

Benefit Eligibility

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those benefits or grants available to persons in receipt of poll tax benefit by virtue of their eligibility for such benefit.

Mr. David Hunt: The benefits and grants available to persons in receipt of community charge benefit are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Debt Reduction

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage Paris Club members to give positive consideration to the Trinidad terms.

Mrs. Chalker: There is a growing consensus among Government creditors on the need to adopt a more generous treatment for the poorest countries than the maximum one-third debt reduction afforded by the Toronto terms. The need for a stock of debt approach is also increasingly being realised. Her Majesty's Government will continue to urge other creditors to agree quickly to a new treatment containing the most important elements of the United Kingdom proposals, launched by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, as Chancellor, in Trinidad last September.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Stabex replenishment obligations owed by all African, Caribbean and Pacific countries indicating which obligations are covered by the proposed debt reduction scheme put forward by Commissioner Marin.

Mrs. Chalker: The latest figures available from the Commission show the value of all actual and potential reconstitution obligations by the developing countries under Stabex as 899 mecu. (One mecu is worth approximately £0·7 million.)

There are three categories, as follows:

Transfers for which reconstitution requirements have not already been notified	Mecu
Jamaica	4·3
Madagascar	0·4
Senegal	49·5
	54·2
Transfers for which reconstitution requirements have not yet been decided by the ACP-EEC council of Ministers
Congo	7·4
Fiji	2·1
Gabon	5·7
Ghana	25·6
Liberia	7·6
Madagascar	1·7
Senegal	66·1
	116·2
Transfers for which it is not yet possible to determine what proportion would be repayable (which will depend on the trend in prices for the commodities covered, the quantities exported and the competitiveness of the ACP countries
Cameroon	180·8
Cote d'Ivoire	311·0
Fiji	0·7
Gabon	3·1
Ghana	47·6
Kenya	61·5
Madagascar	5·5
Mauritius	2·9
Papua New Guinea	80·8
Senegal	34·7
Total	899·0

All of the above transfers are covered by the provision of the proposed debt reduction scheme put forward by Commissioner Marin.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to encourage greater flexibility in repayments and a reduction of International Monetary Fund and World bank debt.

Mrs. Chalker: All creditors regard the preferred creditor status of the international financial institutions as an integral part of the debt strategy. Flexibility in repayment of arrears to the International Monetary Fund would weaken its liquidity and threaten its financial standing. Any similar move on World bank debt would jeopardise the very favourable terms on which it can currently obtain finance from the market, and therefore increase interest charges to all its borrowers.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage a response from banks on commercial debt comparable to Paris Club action on official debt, as outlined by the Prime Minister, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Trinidad terms speech on 19 September 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Arrangements for dealing with commercial bank debt must be a matter for the parties to the loans to negotiate between them, but we continue to urge comparability of treatment between official and commercial debt. We welcome the increasing use of debt reduction in commercial debt deals negotiated under the "Brady initiative".

Ethiopia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he is giving to assistance to the mining industry in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no plans at present to give bilateral assistance to the mining industry in Ethiopia. The European Community's programme of development assistance to Ethiopia includes a project at the Lega Dembi goldmine in Sidamo.

Development Education

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the total amount, the percentage of gross national product and the percentage of overseas aid spent on development education by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Governments in 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: The information available to the OECD is as follows:

These figures may not be strictly comparable given the OECD's widely drawn definition of "development awareness", which could be open to different interpretation by donor countries.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Overseas Development Administration has spent on development education in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: Raising awareness in this country of north-south interdependence and development issues is one of the principal objectives of the ODA's public information programme. It features in all ODA publications with a particular focus on schools.

This financial year, for instance, we have provided a grant of £100,000 to the International Broadcasting Trust towards "The Global Environment", a television series which will be broadcast by BBC Schools Television for the next five years.

In addition, specific development education grants are made to a wide range of organisations. Total annual expenditure is:

Financial year	£
1978-79	219,000
1979-80	560,000
1980-81	413,000
1981-82	223,000
1982-83	171,000
1983-84	106,000

1986-87	106,000
1987-88	146,000
1988-89	223,000
1989-90	138,000
1990-91	312,000

In addition, the ODA provides an annual grant, currently £100,000, to the Overseas Development Institute for certain information and public awareness activities.

Debt

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing, for the period 1975 to 1990, the total public and private long-term net transfer of financial resources including both principal repayments and interest repayments on public and private debt, between the United Kingdom and all developing countries, with a breakdown of these totals by continent.

Mrs. Chalker: Net official and private flows for the years 1975 to 1989, the most recent year for which figures are available, are:

£ million

Year	Official flows (net)	Private flows (net)
1975	422	2,520
1976	957	3,503
1977	695	3,208
1978	948	3,916
1979	1,083	5,277
1980	726	4,527
1981	1,265	4,596
1982	1,117	2,463
1983	1,200	2,813

Year	Official flows (net)	Private flows (net)
1984	1,425	2,196
1985	1,495	423
1986	1,417	3,144
1987	1,310	819
1988	1,666	787
1989	1,857	396

The figures are net of principal repayments but not of interest repayments. Data on interest repayments are not available by country.

Refugees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to support refugees abroad.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's Government continue to be a major supporter of the work of international refugee organisations such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross, and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency. We also provide funding for a large number of British non-governmental organisations working in this field as well as other United Nations bodies such as the United Nations Border Relief Organisation on the Thai/Cambodia border.

In 1990 our refugee assistance overall amounted to some £36·7 million. We expect at least to maintain this level of support in 1991.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to give further support to structural adjustment in Africa under the second phase of the special programme of assistance for sub-Saharan Africa co-ordinated by the World bank.

Mrs. Chalker: Our support for economic reform programmes has been a central aspect of our aid policy in sub-Saharan Africa for several years. We pledged and provided £250 million of bilateral programme aid for the first three-year phase of the special programme of assistance for sub-Saharan Africa (SPA I). We are undertaking to commit up to £300 million bilaterally over the three years 1991-92 to 1993-94 in support of phase II of the special programme (SPA II). These funds will be available to countries selected by Her Majesty's government from among those pursuing economic reform programmes endorsed by the IMF and the IBRD and covered by the SPA.

British funds will be made available alongside funds provided by most bilateral donors and by the key multilateral aid agencies including the World bank, the IMF, the African development bank and the European development fund. Up to 75 per cent. of the United Kingdom bilateral funds will be untied for procurement from developing countries and from donors who are untying a similar or greater proportion of their bilateral contributions to the SPA.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Commonwealth Development Corporation has been authorised to extend its area of operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have decided to give approval to the CDC undertaking activities in Nicaragua. This is subject to consultation between the CDC and my Department on the scale and content of the CDC's intended investment programme in that country.

PRIME MINISTER

Channel Islands

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister how many allegations he has received since the answer given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), 21 October 1982, Official Report, columns 174-75, about maladministration and injustice in the administration of justice in the Channel Island of Jersey.

The Prime Minister: The number of such allegations made to me or to other members of the United Kingdom Government cannot be determined without disproportionate cost, but the total is known to be small.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what organisational changes he has made in the running of No. 10 Downing street since becoming Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: I have made no such changes.

Atomic Energy

Mr. Strang: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to make a one-off top-up donation to the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards budget.

The Prime Minister: The International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguards activities are financed from its regular budget to which the United Kingdom contributes annually. When the agency's board of governors discusses the budget for 1991-92, later this year, the United Kingdom will continue to argue that safeguards activities deserve the highest priority. The Government continue to believe that the regular budget is the best way of financing the agency's safeguards activities, rather than by making extra-budgetary payments.

Export Promotion

Ms. Quin: To ask the Prime Minister whether the proposed integration of the export support resources of the Department of Trade and Industry and of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will entail an overall increase in Government expenditure on export promotion; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The formation of the joint directorate, which was recently announced by Ministers, will not have any direct effect on the overall level of Government expenditure on export promotion. It will, however, help to ensure that the considerable volume of resources available to the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for this work is used as efficiently and effectively as possible in support of United Kingdom businesses.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fiji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of the Government's relations with the Fijian Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have good relations with the Government of Fiji.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made to the Government of Fiji regarding the treatment of trade unionists and other opposition groups in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Foreign Office Ministers have, on several occasions, made the Fiji Government aware of our concern about human rights issues and raised specific cases with Fiji Ministers.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic steps have been taken to ask the interim Government of Fiji to withdraw the constitution promulgated on 25 July 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the position of the British Government as to the entry of Turkey into full membership of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We share the Community consensus that there should be no decisions on EC enlargement until 1993 at least. In the meantime, we are working to strengthen relations between the Community and Turkey within the framework of the existing association agreement.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the support given by the Cyprus Government, including their approval for the use of facilities on the island of Cyprus during the Gulf war.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Cyprus Government offered to make hospital beds available for Gulf war casualties though in the event they were not needed. The Cyprus Government also gave their firm support to the United Nations Security Council resolutons.

As sovereign British territory, the use of the sovereign base areas (SBA) within the terms of the treaty of establishment is a matter for Her Majesty's Government.

The Gulf

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the help given by the Greek Government during the Gulf war.

Mr. Garel-Jones: From the early stages of the crisis, the Greek Government supported the United Nations Security Council resolutions. A frigate, the Limnos, was sent to the Red sea to help with the naval blockade of Iraq. In addition, Greece contributed United States $10 million to EC economic and humanitarian assistance for Egypt, Jordan and Turkey.

Baltic States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he has to increase Britain's aid to the Baltic states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are keen to assist economic reform in the Baltic states. The British Council is increasing its activities in the three Republics, and has recently established new scholarships for Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. The Baltic states will also become eligible for know-how fund assistance when the fund begins disbursing in April. We are willing to consider new ideas for aid as they arise.

Sri Lanka

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government supports Australian proposals for peace negotiations in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) of 4 March.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Foreign Affairs Council held on 26 March in Luxembourg.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs attended an informal meeting of EC Foreign Ministers in Luxembourg on 26 March. In a useful discussion of European security and defence my right hon. Friend set out our view that we need to develop the European defence identity by strengthening the WEU with links to both the alliance and the Twelve. They also discussed the situation in Yugoslavia, and issued a statement calling for a peaceful and democratic resolution to that country's constitutional crisis.

Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the reasons why the United Kingdom abstained in the vote at the 45th General Assembly of the United Nations concerning the call for the prohibition of military attacks on civil-safeguarded nuclear facilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In its explanation of vote on the resolution the United Kingdom stated:

"The United Kingdom's policy is to maintain negotiations on this subject in the Conference on Disarmament. In our view operative paragraphs 1 and 4 of L38 are inconsistent with that approach".

(Resolution L38 was entitled "Prohibition of Attacks on Nuclear Facilities".)

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was made by the United Kingdom to the criticisms made by the Nigerian delegation to the partial test ban treaty amendment conference in New York in January, about the failure of the United Kingdom and its two depositary power partners to meet its obligations under the 1963 partial test ban treaty to achieve a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The head of the UK delegation addressed issues raised by other delegations in his speech to the conference on 11 January which concluded the general debate. He made clear that we continue to observe our obligations under the 1963 treaty through our participation in the conference on disarmament, and that we have a requirement to test for the foreseeable future because of the contribution to deterrence made by nuclear weapons.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy position was expressed by the United Kingdom delegation to the amendment conference of the partial nuclear test ban treaty held in New York in January in response to proposals put forward for a moratorium on nuclear testing worldwide.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The head of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference made clear our position: because our security will depend for the foreseeable future on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons, we have a continuing need to test our nuclear weapons to ensure that they remain effective and up to date.

Israel

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 715, if he will specify the individual actions he has taken in the last 24 months, in pursuance of his continued active support for resolution 242.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had innumerable contacts with the parties concerned, whether nationally or through the European Community, to discuss measures to further the peace process on the basis of Security Council resolution 242. The United Kingdom has also voted in favour of Security Council resolutions 672, 673 and 681 which reaffirm resolution 242.

"World in Action" Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library (a) the transcript and (b) the video cassette of the "World in Action" programme broadcast on 25 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have already obtained a video cassette of this programme, but see no need to purchase a transcript.

China

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in implementing the Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) (Distribution) Order 1987.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign Compensation Commission, which has been assisted in the performance of administrative tasks by the accountants, Ernst and Young, will on 2 April 1991 begin making payments from the China fund amounting to approximately £25 million, representing 62·25 per cent. of the value assigned to claims, to successful claimants against the fund. These disbursements will exhaust the balance in the fund.

Maritime Military Doctrine

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding participation in seminars on maritime military doctrine with non-NATO nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In accordance with the commitment in the 1990 Vienna document on confidence and security-building measures we shall be participating in the second military doctrine seminar between all CSCE participating states which will be held in Vienna later this year. The agenda for the seminar has yet to be decided, but is likely to allow coverage of a range of conventional arms control issues.

Naval Confidence-building Measures

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards British participation in naval confidence-building measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are a number of global and bilateral measures dealing with naval forces in which Britain participates, including incidents at sea agreements, which contribute to "confidence-building". We continue to keep under review the need for further arrangements in the maritime sphere.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to abolish capital punishment in the Caribbean dependent territories and Bermuda.

Mr. Hurd: In order to be consistent with the position in the United Kingdom where Parliament has expressed a clear view, the British Government consider that the death penalty for murder should be abolished in those dependent territories which elect to remain under the Crown. Following consultations conducted by our Governors with their dependent territory Governments, we shall submit for the approval of Her Majesty the Queen at a forthcoming meeting of the Privy Council an order under which the death penalty for murder in the Caribbean dependent territories will be abolished and a sentence for life imprisonment substituted. The British Government hope that the Government of Bermuda will decide to follow this example as soon as possible.

Immigration

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how long a person who applies for a visa for a three-month visit but is granted one for six months may remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Visit visas do not specify the length of stay permitted. This is decided by the immigration officer in granting leave at the port of entry. A person granted leave to enter may remain for the period endorsed in the passport.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many husbands have applied from India for settlement visas to join their wives in Britain in each of the last three years; how many have been granted; and how many have been refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is given in the table.

Husbands applying in India for an entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom

Number of persons

	Applications
	Newly received	Granted	Of which, granted on appeal	Refused initially
1988	470	360	50	260
1989	540	400	90	250

TRANSPORT

Cyclists

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to promote the use of reflective clothing, effective lights and other precautions by cyclists using the public highway.

Mr. Chope: Our spring child cyclist campaign will include advice on the need for cyclists to take steps to ensure they can be seen by other road users. Advice is also included in the highway code and other road safety material distributed by the Department.

Association of British Travel Agents

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with representatives of the Association of British Travel Agents about the extension of the air travel reserve fund to cover passengers travelling on scheduled flights and services.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend has not held any recent discussions with representatives of the Association of British Travel Agents. However, the president of the association has written to my right hon. and learned Friend confirming the association's support for extending consumer financial protection to scheduled airline passengers. This followed my right hon. and learned Friend's recent request to the Civil Aviation Authority for advice on this issue.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year how many nuclear flasks from (a) research reactors and (b) nuclear power stations were imported on non-purpose built ships over the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The details of imported shipments of irradiated nuclear fuel using non-purpose built vessels during the last 10 years are as follows:

(a) Research reactors: One flask in 1990; and

(b) Nuclear power stations: 148 flasks over the 10-year period broken down as follows:

Shipment per year

Year	Total
1980	29
1981	45
1982	18
1983	26
1984	2
1985	11
1986	8
1987	6
1988	4
1989	16
1990	24

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the ports through which irradiated nuclear fuel from nuclear power stations was imported in 1988 and 1989 and the number of flasks and tonnage of irradiated nuclear fuel imported through each port.

Mr. McLoughlin: The ports through which flasks were imported and the tonnage of irradiated fuel they contained for the years 1988 and 1989 are as follows:

Number of flask movements (tonnage)

Dover 1988	22·79 tonnes)	1989	1,624·41 tonnes)
Goole 1988	Nil	1989	10·56 tonnes)
Immingham 1988	Nil	1989	10·56 tonnes)
Barrow 1988	82 (218·4 tonnes)	1989	89238·1 tonnes)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the ports through which irradiated nuclear fuel from foreign research reactors was imported over the last 10 years and the number of flasks and tonnage of irradiated nuclear fuel imported through each port.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the last 10 years there has been only a single import of irradiated fuel from a foreign research reactor, in 1990 through the port of Felixstowe. The radioactive content was 0·004 tonnes.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the ship used to import irradiated nuclear fuel from India was purpose built; which port was its point of entry; and what was the route taken to Dounreay.

Mr. McLoughlin: The port of entry for the recent movement of irradiated fuel from India was Felixstowe. Movement from Felixstowe to Dounreay was by road; the route was as follows:
A45—A604—A1(M)/A1—A66—M6—A74/M74—M73/A80—M80—M9—A9—A895/882—836.
The ship used for this journey is classed as a general cargo ship and is registered in India.

Carlisle Bypass

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the consultant's report on the options for the Carlisle bypass to be finished.

Mr. Chope: The consultant's report is expected to be with the Department by the summer of 1992 to allow public consultation to take place in February 1993.

Marine Safety

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average fine in cases where employers in marine and waterways were found guilty of breaches of health and safety legislation.

Mr. McLoughlin: The fines in the successful prosecutions initiated by the Department of Transport on marine occupational health and safety matters since 1980 have varied generally between £50 and £750.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prohibition notices were issued by his Department to marine and waterway employers since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: Powers to issue prohibition notices were given to the Department under the Merchant Shipping Act 1984. The total number of prohibition notices issued from that date to the end of 1990 is 78.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many improvement notices were issued by his Department to marine and waterway employers since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: Powers to issue improvement notices were given to the Department under the Merchant Shipping Act 1984. The total number of improvement notices issued from that date to the end of 1990 is 210.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions of employers in the marine and waterways sectors for failing to produce safety policies have been undertaken by his Department in the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employers are required to produce a safety policy under the Merchant Shipping (Health and Safety: General Duties) Regulations 1984. To date there have been no prosecutions for failure to comply with that provision.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for statutory regulation of working time for marine workers; and what steps he is taking to implement International Labour Organisation convention 147 in respect of the regulation of working time for marine workers.

Mr. McLoughlin: Draft regulations together with a draft code of practice on seafarers' hours of work were recently circulated to representative organisations for comment.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes are planned in the way in which statistics on health and safety of marine workers are collected.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine accident investigation branch is responsible for the collection and recording of accidents to seamen and is in the process of reviewing the system. It is too early to say what changes will be made but the object is to identify the essential factors in an incident and record them in a readily retrievable form.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change the list of possible causes of marine accidents to exclude placing responsibility on victims.

Mr. McLoughlin: No changes are proposed in the existing policy, which is that the apportionment of liability is not the purpose of marine accident investigation. However, to exclude personal fault or error from the possible causative factors would be unrealistic.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy in all accident recording for marine workers for the length of the continuous duty period preceding the accident, the lengths of time away from work available for rest and for continuous sleep, and the arrangements for rest and sleep within the 24-hour cycle for all persons involved to be recorded.

Mr. McLoughlin: Certain information concerning hours worked prior to an accident is already collected. Consideration is being given to whether this aspect needs to be widened to collect more detailed information.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many marine surveyors are in post; and what is their establishment.

Mr. McLouglin: A total of 192 marine surveyors are currently in post in the Department against a complement of 204.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspections of British and non-British registered ships took place during the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of general inspections of United Kingdom ships and port state control inspections of foreign-registered ships for the years 1983-90 are as follows; equivalent data for earlier years are not available.

Year	United Kingdom ships	Non United Kingdom ships
1983	581	2,557
1984	587	2,529
1985	731	2,532

Year	United Kingdom ships	Non United Kingdom ships
1986	629	2,788
1987	716	2,122
1988	[1]810	1,831
1989	[1][2]3,342	1,697
1990	[3]n/a	2,087

[1] Financial year figures 1988-89 onwards.
[2] Following the Marchioness disaster it was decided to both increase numbers of inspections of United Kingdom ships and revise the statistical basis of their calculation. The figures for 1989-90 reflect this change of policy.
[3] Not available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions of employers in the waterways and marine sectors have been initiated by his Department for health and safety breaches in the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport has initiated 13 successful prosecutions on marine occupational health and safety matters since 1980.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce statutory regulations for working time to all crewed ships regardless of size.

Mr. McLoughlin: The industry is being consulted on the possible introduction of statutory regulations for seafarers' hours of work. The draft regulations circulated recently for comment apply to seagoing United Kingdom ships—other than fishing vessels and pleasure craft, neither of which are included in the International Labour Organisation convention No. 147—and to foreign ships in United Kingdom ports.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Department last made a systematic assessment of the health and safety record of the waterways sector; and where the results of such an assessment were published.

Mr. McLoughlin: The general occupational health and safety of merchant seamen is under continuous assessment but the Department of Transport has made no specific study of the waterways sector. Responsibility for the health and safety of many land-based workers on waterways falls to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a port safety forum of employers, unions, safety inspectorates, harbourmasters and port authorities to assist in the avoidance of accidents.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Accident Prevention Committee, run by the British Ports Federation, has provided such a forum for over 25 years.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to transferring the marine inspectorate to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: Lord Cullen did not recommend any changes in Department of Transport responsibilities under the Merchant Shipping Acts and I am not considering any.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to extend regulations and other legislation, pursuant to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act to cover workers on British-registered ships.

Mr. McLoughlin: It would not be practicable to extend precisely the same health and safety legislation to workers on ships and on land, but it is the Department's policy to provide a level of protection for workers on United Kingdom-registered ships corresponding to that provided for land-based workers.

Official Cars

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many parking tickets were received and paid by his Department in each year since 1988 in respect of official cars.

Mr. Chope: The information readily available records one parking ticket received and paid in 1989 and one in 1990 in respect of official cars operated directly by the Department of Transport.

Motorways

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current average speed of cars on motorways in Great Britain.

Mr. Chope: Data on vehicle speeds are collected by automatic counters as a by-product of the national traffic census. The counters are not placed near bends, hills or junctions and so can measure vehicle speeds only in uncongested conditions. The results do not, therefore, give any indication of overall average journey speeds.

At present, only a limited number of counters are in operation on motorways, but the data so far available suggest that the average speed of cars in 1990 was 73 mph.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) the fatality rate, in terms of distance travelled, and (b) the average speed of cars on motorways in Great Britain if the motorway speed limit were to be raised to 80 mph.

Mr. Chope: The relationship between speed, speed limits, accident risk and accident severity are complex and, in the absence of recent experience in the United Kingdom of changing speed limits, difficult to predict. On the basis of overseas experience and, in particular recent changes in speed limits in the United States and Switzerland, an increase in the motorway speed limit to 80 mph might result in an increase in the average free-flow speed of cars and a consequent increase in motorway fatalities.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the fatality rate, in terms of distance travelled, on motorways in Great Britain for the latest 12-month period available.

Mr. Chope: The most recent data available are for 1989, when there were 228 fatalities on motorways and A(M) roads at an estimated rate of 3·8 fatalities per billion vehicle kilometres.

Stansted Airport Rail Link

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what forecast of usage was used by British Rail when seeking approval of investment in the Stansted airport rail link; and what was the actual usage during the first week of operation.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has no information on the use of the Stansted express rail link in its first week of operation. My hon. Friend may wish to obtain this from British Rail. The rail service has been planned to accommodate the demand for rail travel associated with the capacity of the first phase of Stansted development, that is, about 2,500 rail passengers each way per day.

Traffic Measures

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the extension of proposed London traffic measures to all metropolitan districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department has received representations by and on behalf of a number of local authorities outside London for changes to be made to the Road Traffic Bill so that the new, decriminalised parking regime for London can be available elsewhere.

We are considering these representations.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the contingency plans which exist to deal with a major oil spillage in (a) the English channel and (b) the North sea.

Mr. McLoughlin: Because it is impossible to predict where or when a tanker accident may occur, the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit's (MPCU) contingency plan for at-sea clean-up consists of highly mobile resources on short-notice standby. These are positioned at various locations around the United Kingdom, from where they can be deployed quickly to the English channel, the North sea or any other part of the UK that might be threatened by a major oil spillage.

The responsibilty for onshore clean-up rests primarily with coastal local authorities. Those bordering the English channel and the North sea all have their own contingency plans for dealing with coastal pollution and can call on advice and specialist resources from the MPCU, which in a major spillage would co-ordinate the onshore response as well as directing offshore operations. This is to ensure that the at-sea and onshore clean-up response is fully integrated.

A list of all directly owned or contracted counter-pollution resources available to the MPCU is held in the Library.

Because of his overall responsibility for co-ordinating Government policy on environmental pollution, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment would be kept closely informed along with other Departments and agencies such as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Nature Conservancy Council.

The UK is a contracting party to the multilateral (Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, UK and EC) Bonn agreement for co-operation in dealing with pollution of the North sea by oil or other harmful substances and is a signatory to an Anglo-French joint maritime contingency plan (Mancheplan) for dealing with pollution in the English channel. Both of these international arrangements provide for the provision of assistance, if requested, to help combat major oil spillages.

Resources would also be contracted in from the private sector as needed.

North Tyneside Steam Railway

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to approve the North Tyneside Steam Railway Light Railway Order.

Mr. McLoughlin: The order was approved Wednesday 27 March 1991.

Poynton Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from British Aerospace plc about the line of route of the proposed A523 Poynton bypass.

Mr. Chope: British Aerospace responded to the public consultation held at the end of 1989. The company supported the principle of a bypass but was concerned about the proximity of the consultation routes to its runway. Discussions with the company are continuing.

M62

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cause of delays in the completion of the work between junctions 12 and 13 of the M62 motorway at Eccles/Worsley.

Mr. Chope: The works have been more extensive than initally thought necessary and in order to keep delays to a minimum in the long term, we are completing all the works required during the present closures.

A45

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions the A45 east and west of Bury St. Edmunds has been the subject of repairs over the past 10 years; what was the reason in the case of each closure between the Westley-Fornham junction and Rookery crossroads; what was the approximate duration and cost of repairs relating to each closure; and when he expects the road to be fully up to standard.

Mr. Chope: From the information available, apart from routine maintenance, there have been eight occasions. These are in the table.

Year	Location	Works	Duration	Cost £
1984-85	Bury bypass bridges	Plane and resurface	Not known	120,580
1986	Rougham to Bury	Reconstruction and resurface	February-June	1·25 million
1986	St. Saviours interchange	Concrete repairs	May-August	140,000
1986-87	Bury to Rougham	Concrete repairs	Not known	500,000
1988	Rougham westwards	Major maintenance	January-June	1·08 million
1988-89	Bury bypass	Concrete repairs	Not known	225,000
1989	Bury bypass bridges	Bridge joints and resurface —lane closures	October-December	42,000
1990-91	Bury bypass	Reconstruction, joint repairs and overlay	October-April	5 million

Once the major maintenance has finished this week the road will be up to current standards.

Child Safety Restraints

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for a new campaign educating drivers about the need for children to wear safety restraints.

Mr. Chope: We shall shortly be launching a campaign to encourage the wearing of seat restraints by both adults and children travelling in the rear seats of cars.

Immingham

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to monitor the development of the port of Immingham to ensure its compliance with undertakings given by the developers to Parliament and to the Government.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. It is not for my Department to monitor developments authorised by private Acts. But I am assured by Associated British Ports that it will provide quarterly information about steam coal imports at Immingham from the arrival of the first ship at the new facilities to 31 December 1985 to the Department of Energy and the House of Commons Library, in accordance with the undertaking given to the Select Committee of the House of Commons during the passage of the Associated British Ports Act 1990.

M62

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when junction 13 of the M62 motorway at Worsley will be reopened.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible. We shall need to keep the northbound off-slip road closed for some time after the rest of the junction is reopened, while we carry out works on Worsley canal west bridge.

Elderly Drivers

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of elderly people who have given up driving as a result of his Department's campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government recognise the value to older people of maintaining their independence and mobility and have not been running a campaign to encourage them to give up driving. It is, however, important that any driver should notify DVLA if he develops a medical condition which might affect his ability to drive safely. In the year to April 1990 some 32,000 people over the age of 70 gave up driving on medical grounds out of a total of 1·7 million licence holders in this age group.

British Rail (Paddington)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on investment in British Rail services operating out of Paddington.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that I have today approved investment of nearly £50 million in 65 class 165 Networker turbo vehicles. These new diesel multiple units will run on Thames line express services between Paddington and Oxford/Newbury. They will replace the existing loco-hauled trains which are becoming increasingly unreliable and costly to maintain, and bring about considerable improvements in quality of service.

THE ARTS

Richmond Adult College (Exhibition)

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has considered an application for an exhibition of paintings from the Richmond upon Thames adult college to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Renton: Yes. I am glad to sponsor "Richmond: The Place—the People" exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Bradford Playhouse

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the proposal by the British Film Institute to transfer funding from the Bradford Playhouse and film theatre to the former Library theatre now owned by the national museum of photography; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have received no representations about this proposal, other than a letter from the hon. Member himself.

Funding

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much funding his Department has provided directly or indirectly to the national museum of photography and the British Film Institute over each of the past three years, to date; what is his policy on cross-funding by bodies funded by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since 1988 my Department has provided the following funding to the British Film Institute:

	£ million
1988-89	11·30
1989-90	11·90
1990-91	12·75

In each of those years the national museum of science and industry has allocated some 10 per cent. of its grant in aid to the national museum of photography, film and television. The allocation for 1991-92 will amount to some £2 million. Cross-funding by Office of Arts and Libraries-funded bodies may occur, provided they are acting within their respective functions, however defined.

British Film Institute

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister for the Arts what control he exercises over the decisions by the British Film Institute on the allocation of its budgets; whether he monitors the implications of such decisions; and what reserve powers he has to overturn such decisions.

Mr. Renton: The OAL's relations with its grant-in-aid-funded bodies is on an arm's-length basis. The BFI's proposals for the allocation of its budget are monitored through the annual submissions of its corporate plan.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will call for a report from the board of the British Film Institute on the reasons for the transfer of old funds from the Bradford Playhouse and Film Theatre to the Old Library Theatre Museum of Photography; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I have no plans to do so.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish the total amount of revenue collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in serious misdeclaration penalties since April 1990 to the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Serious misdeclaration penalty has only been in force since 1 April 1990 and information on penalties imposed will be published in due course in the annual Customs and Excise Board's report.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table, in the format of table 21.2.3 of Cm 621, analysing other current local authority expenditure consistent with table 5.8 of Cm 1520.

Mr. Mellor: Data are no longer held in a form which allows separate identification of all the items set out in table 21.2.3 of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper —Cm 621. The available information is shown in the table.

Chancery plc

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration the Bank of England banking supervision department has given to Chancery plc's last submissions on capital adequacy; and what decisions it has reached.

Mr. Maples: That is a matter for the Bank of England, but the confidentiality restrictions of part V of the Banking Act 1987 would prohibit the bank from disclosing any such information about an individual institution.

Knitting Patterns

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what reasons underlay his decision to change the VAT status of knitting patterns;

(2) if he will zero-rate for VAT purposes knitting patterns for babywear and children's garments;

(3) what are the reasons for the differing treatment for VAT purposes of individual knitting patterns and knitting patterns presented in a collection.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The law zero-rates books, booklets, brochures, pamphlets and leaflets. Knitting patterns, including those for babywear and children's garments, can therefore be zero-rated only if they fall to be classified under one of these headings. In the past, single or double sheet knitting patterns were accepted as qualifying for zero-rating. However, Customs and Excise have had to review this position in the light of recent decisions by the independent VAT tribunal, that "A leaflet must be limp, and generally, if not inevitably, on unlaminated paper".

Having obtained legal opinion that these patterns do not in fact qualify for zero-rating, Customs have notified that they should be standard-rated with effect from 1 May 1991.

Sports and Arts Foundation

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for monitoring and accountability of decision making by the proposed new foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Mellor: Suitable arrangements for monitoring and audit are among the conditions that will need to be satisfied before I could agree to a cut in pool betting duty. The most appropriate form for these arrangements will be determined in future discussions with the proposers of the new foundation.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to meet the pools companies to discuss the proposed foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Mellor: I have no immediate plans to meet the pools companies to discuss a proposed foundation for sport and the arts, but officials in the Treasury plan shortly to meet representatives of the companies.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings, and over what time scale, Ministers and officials from his Department held with representatives of the pools companies to discuss the establishing of a new foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Mellor: Before the Budget my right hon. Friend the Chancellor and I met representatives of one of the pools companies on 8 March to discuss their proposals to establish a new foundation for sport and the arts. My officials have also held meetings with representatives of the same company.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the time scale involved in establishing the foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Mellor: Providing that a foundation can be established with satisfactory terms and conditions, I would expect it to start operating from the beginning of the 1991-92 football season in August.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what method and criteria will be adopted in deciding the membership of the proposed foundation for sport and the arts;

(2) how many individuals from each of (a) the Sports Council, (b) the Scottish Sports Council, (c) the Sports Council for Wales, (d) the Sports Council for Northern Ireland, (e) the British Olympic Association, (f) the Central Council for Physical Recreation, (g) the Department of Education and Science, (h) the Arts Council, (i) the Pools Promoters Association, (j) the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, (k) the Association of District Councils, (l) the Association of County Councils, (m) the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and (n) the Association of Local Authorities in Northern Ireland will be included in the membership of the proposed foundation for sport and the arts; and what other organisations will be represented;

(3) what is his estimate of the ratio of funding between sport and the arts by the new foundation for sport and the arts;

(4) how many staff will be employed by the proposed foundation for sport and the arts.

Mr. Mellor: In his Budget statement on 19 March my right hon. Friend announced that he had received a proposal from one of the pools promoters for a new foundation for sport and the arts. The matters raised in the hon. Member's questions, together with a number of others, will need to be determined in future discussions with the proposers of the new foundation.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the pools scheme to benefit the arts and sports will also contribute to museums.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 26 March 1991]: It will be for the trustees to determine, once the foundation for sport and the arts is established, whether museums will benefit from the funds to be allocated.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to remove VAT from sanitary towels and tampons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have no plans to remove VAT from sanitary products or other essential items of personal hygiene. In any case, this would be contrary to EC law.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to compensate health authorities for the Budget increase in the standard rate of value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have agreed that in the special case of the health programmes, the additional costs to health authorities should be added to existing provision as a claim against the reserve. This will also apply to comparable expenditure in Scotland and Wales. The increased provision will be granted to the national health service in supplementary estimates for 1991-92 to be presented in due course later in the year.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms were registered for value added tax, were new registrations for value added tax, and ceased to be registered for value added tax, in each year from 1987 to date, in the parliamentary constituencies of (a) Tottenham and (b) Hornsey and Wood Green.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 March 1991]: The local VAT Office at Enfield covers areas in addition to the constituencies of Tottenham and Hornsey and Wood Green. No distinction is made between businesses registering for the first time and other registrations, for example, a sole proprietor taking on a partner or forming a limited company.

Years End December	New Registrations	Deregistrations
1987	2,740	2,297
1988	2,816	2,229
1989	3,583	2,367
1990	3,087	2,575

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what resources and how many civil servants for how many days were devoted to Her Majesty's Government's plans to raise value added tax to 17·5 per cent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 March 1991]: Civil servants provided advice to Ministers on a wide range of subjects during the Budget period. It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the time spent advising on any one particular issue.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the effect on the headline and core rates of inflation on value added tax at 17½ per cent.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 26 March 1991]: The increase in the standard rate of value added tax from 15 to 17½ per cent. will add 1·1 percentage points to RPI inflation in 1991-92, on the assumption that it is fully passed on to the consumer. But this effect will be more than offset by the Budget measures on the community charge, which will reduce RPI inflation by 1·9 percentage points.

There is no unique measure of underlying inflation. Moreover, as explained in the Government's observations on the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's report on the 1990 Budget, it is helpful when analysing underlying inflation to abstract from once-off changes, such as changes to indirect taxes.

The increase in VAT will have no effect on producer output price inflation. It will have the following effects on measured inflation between April 1991 and March 1992:

add 1·2 percentage points to RPI inflation excluding mortgage interest payments, offset by the Budget reduction in the community charge;

add 1·3 percentage points to RPI inflation excluding mortgage interest payments and community charge; add 1 percentage point to the increase in the market price GDP deflator.

But these effects are best seen as once-off changes to the price level, associated with switching from community charge to indirect taxes, rather than increases in underlying inflation.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he is making to allow guest house and hotel proprietors to recoup the increases in value added tax on holidays prebooked and prepaid before the rise from tour operators and by tour operators from their customers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 March 1991]: No special arrangements are necessary. Guest houses and hotel proprietors and tour operators will either be able to use the normal arrangements governing a change of VAT rate or, where appropriate, arrangements under the tour operators' margin scheme. Details are explained in the relevant Customs and Excise public notice and leaflet. To the extent that guest house and hotel proprietors have received payment before 1 April 1991, they will have no additional VAT liability in respect of that payment.

Trade Unions

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government policy on recognition of relevant trade unions for the purposes of representation and collective bargaining extends to all Government Departments and, with the exception of GCHQ, to agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 March 1991]: The Government as employer recognises relevant trade unions where they are representative. The level and extent of recognition is a matter for management discretion.

Petrol Tax

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the tax on petrol would have to be increased to raise the amount equivalent to the community charge necessary to fund local authority spending up to standard assessment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 27 March 1991]: As set out in table 6.9 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", the net yield of the community charge in 1991-92 is now forecast to be £7·2 billion. Calculated on a basis consistent with the ready reckoner published in the 1990 autumn statement—table 4·7—an additional yield of £7·2 billion in 1991-92 would require an increase in petrol duties of around 92 per cent. However, this estimate is subject to considerable uncertainty about the extent to which such a large increase in duties would induce consumers to switch between different categories of expenditure.

Woolwich Building Society

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to public funds of defending the case brought by the Woolwich Equitable Building Society against the Commissioners of Inland Revenue arising from section 40 of the Finance Act 1985.

Mr. Maude: This information is not available. Confidential discussions are taking place between the parties to the action on the subject of costs.

Mortgages

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated effect on the retail prices index of every 1 per cent. decrease in mortgage rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A fall of one percentage point in mortgage interest rates would currently reduce the all items retail prices index by approximately 0·5 percentage points.

Banking Regulations

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, following the collapse of Chancery plc, he has any plans to conduct a further review of the United Kingdom banking regulations.

Mr. Maples: No.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria are followed in determining whether persons are fit and proper for the purposes of controlling banking operations.

Mr. Maples: The criteria for determining whether persons are fit and proper for the purposes of controlling banking operations are set out in schedule 3 of the Banking Act 1987 and are explained further in the statement of principles on section 16 of the Act.

Share Shops

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the criteria by which the Treasury will assess proposals for high street share shops; and how these will be integrated into the privatisation programme.

Mr. Maude: We will be looking for share-dealing mechanisms which provide easy access by the small-scale shareholder for buying and selling shares, either on an execution-only basis or with support and advice where customers seek it. The outlets could be shops, counters or other means of local delivery. Applicants could be individual organisations or joint ventures. The operator of the service will need to be able to comply with the regulatory requirements of the Financial Services and other relevant Acts.

If suitable proposals come forward quickly enough, the Government would consider appointing a retail sales manager for the BT share sale to distribute shares through high street outlets.

I am delighted that a good deal of interest has already been expressed in this proposition.

EC Budget

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the net contributions by the United Kingdom to the EC budget for each of the last four quarters.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimates for net contributions to the EC budget on a balance of payments basis are:

	£ million
1990
Q1	353
Q2	694
Q3	542
Q4	887

The figure for the fourth quarter has been revised upwards by £516 million in the light of corrected information which has become available since the press notice on the balance of payments was published by the CSO on 13 March.

This and other revisions will be incorporated in the CSO press notice on the quarterly balance of payments accounts to be published in June.

This revision to the fourth quarter of 1990 does not affect the projection of the invisible balance for January and February 1991 published in the CSO press notice of 25 March, nor does it affect the forecasts of the balance of payments for 1991 published in the FSBR tables 3.1 and 3.5.

Secondary Banks' Collapses

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes there have been in policy on secondary banks' collapses since 1974.

Mr. Maples: Significant improvements have been made to the system of banking supervision under the provisions of the Banking Acts 1979 and 1987. So far as individual cases are concerned, the bank's reaction continues to be determined on a case-by-case basis in the light of all the prevailing circumstances.

VAT

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to compensate health authorities for the Budget increase in the standard rate of value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have agreed that in the special case of the health programmes, the additional costs to health authorities should be added to existing provision as a claim against the reserve. This will also apply to comparable expenditure in Scotland and Wales. The increased provision will be granted to the NHS in supplementary estimates for 1991-92 to be presented in due course later in the year.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the population figures used for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland for the per capita calculations in his answer to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on identifiable public expenditure of 13 December, Official Report, columns 457-58, citing data sources and (b) the population figures used for England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the English regions for the per capita calculations in the Treasury's note on public expenditure by territory and region in HC 41 of 1990-91, pp. 41-46, citing data sources.

Mr. Mellor: The population figures for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland used for the per capita calculations in the 1990 analysis of identifiable public expenditure and in the updated version of the table on public expenditure by territory and region given in appendix F of the statistical supplement to the autumn statement (Cm 1520) are set out in table 1. The population figures for the regions of England used in the latter analysis are set out in table 2.

[2] During the course of the preparation of this reply a minor error has come to light in the figure used (1,556·8) to produce the per capita figures for Northern Ireland for 1986-87. The effect of this is to overstate total Northern Ireland per capita expenditure in that year by £19 (0·6 per cent.)

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total weekly income support entitlement for a married man with children aged four and six years if his income is (a) £50 per week, (b) £130 per week and (c) £160 per week.

Mr. Jack: Income support is an inappropriate benefit, but my hon. Friend may be interested in the figures with family credit which is a more suitable benefit for the examples. The information is set out in the table. All assumptions are as set out in the published tax benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge. Average rents are provisional 1991-92 figures and community charge has been assessed at £250 per annum. Any relevant changes announced in the Budget have also been incorporated.

It should be noted that the results in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use hypothetical rents so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the number of income support or family income supplement recipients for each of the years 1979 to 1990 showing, in each case, the number of recipients estimated to be liable to income tax at the date of their previous claim.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of recipients liable to income tax is not available.

Incomes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables similar to the tax benefit model table showing the net weekly spending power for each of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years, (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged eight, 11 and 15 years, (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years with weekly earnings of (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110, (vii) £120, (viii) £130, (ix) £140, (x) £150, (xi) £160, (xii) £170, and (xiii) £180 together with net weekly spending power in the first weeks of unemployment when the individuals concerned are classified as long-term unemployed.

Mr. Jack: The information is set out in the tables. All assumptions are as set out in the published tax benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge. Average rents are provisional 1991-92 figures and community charge has been assessed at £250 per annum. Any relevant changes announced in the Budget have also been incorporated.

Lone Parents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of lone parents and their dependants in November 1979 and November 1990 or the nearest date possible, dependent on receipt of social security benefit or income support and family income or payment; and what was the total number of lone parents and their dependants on the same dates, showing in each case the percentage change since 1979.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table. The latest information available is shown, but the dates vary and the sets of figures are therefore not strictly comparable. The references to social security benefit and family income have been read as supplementary benefit and family income supplement/family credit respectively.

Supplementary benefit/income support[1]

	November 1979	May 1989	Percentage increase
Lone parents	318,000	767,000	141
Dependants	558,000	1,307,000	134

Family income supplement/family credit[2]

	November 1979	July 1990[4]	Percentage increase
Lone parents	42,000	126,000	200
Dependants	73,000	200,000	174

[2] Ten per cent. sample of family income supplement load and 5 per cent. sample of family credit load.

Total of lone parent families[3]

	November 1979	November 1986	Percentage increase

Benefits and Allowances

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the value in real terms, in absolute figures and as a percentage of retirement and other state pensions and all other welfare and national insurance benefits and allowances paid in (a) November 1979 and (b) November 1990; and what were the actual figures for each benefit in each year.

Miss Widdecombe: The last uprating date for which such calculations were made was April 1990 and I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 28 June 1990 at columns 355-66 and the reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 2 July 1989 at columns 455-56. The missing figures on the real level of invalidity pension are the same as those for retirement pension given in the earlier answer.

These answers do not cover income-related benefits such as income support. The levels of all income-related benefits payable in November 1979 and 1990 can be found in "Social Security Statistics" for 1980 and 1990 respectively, which are in the Library. Changes over time to the benefit system have rendered increasingly meaningless any attempt to make hypothetical comparisons between what people get now under the various income-related benefits and what they might generally have got under previous schemes.

Personal Pensions

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about the 2 per cent. incentive for holders of personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: This year four letters have been received from members of the public about the 2 per cent. incentive. These have mainly been in response to press articles on the subject.

Local Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a breakdown of the national and local benefit agency structure on a constituency basis.

Miss Widdecombe: There are currently no plans to publish a guide containing this information. However, district office managers will be contacting individual Members in the near future with details of how the boundaries of the district structure relate to their constituencies.

State Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men aged 64 years are receiving a social security benefit; what would be the additional cost of paying them retirement pension; and what would be the cost of providing retirement pension to men aged 64 years not in receipt of any social security benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the £100 million cash limit on the social fund will have on the local and central administration of the fund; and what consideration he gave in fixing it at that level, to the risk of the fund running out of money before the end of the financial year.

Mr. Scott: The social fund has always operated nationally within a net budget, and the setting of a net cash limit now formalises this arrangement. This does not affect the local administration of the social fund where budgets will continue to operate on the basis of gross district budgets. We have no reason to believe that the £100 million net budget will not support the 1991-92 national gross budget of £227·7 million throughout the year.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing district office social fund allocations for 1991-92 and the allocations to the local offices comprised in each district for 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: Details of the local office social fund allocations in 1990-91 and the district office allocations for 1991-92 are in the Library. I will write to the hon. Member with details of the local offices covered by each new district office, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of social fund loans was estimated to be non-recoverable in fixing the fund's cash limit for 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The expected level of loan recoveries does not affect the social fund's cash limit of £100 million.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the social fund's cash limit for 1991-92 and its estimated net expenditure on discretionary grants and loans for 1990-91, in cash terms and in real terms.

Mr. Scott: The social fund net cash limit for 1991-92 is £100 million. Estimated net expenditure on grants and loans in 1990-91 in cash terms and real terms at 1991-92 prices is as follows:

Loans £ million	(At 1991-92 prices)	Grants £ million	(At 1991-92 prices)
31·4	(33·6 million)	67·1	(71·8 million)

Real terms figures have been calculated using the current GDP deflator and may alter. In any event the social fund budget is based on a number of factors, including the level of gross allocation permitted by expected loan recoveries and is not linked to inflation forecasts.

Carers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what steps he is currently taking to ensure that all payments to carers are made at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Scott: To ensure that all payments to carers are made at the earliest possible date, clearance times for invalid care allowance claims are kept under close and regular scrutiny. Despite claims increasing by 50 per cent. during the period October 1990 to January 1991 compared with the same period last year, the clearance time for the year to date is 38·5 days against a published target of 38 days.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what methods of payment will be available to recipients of (a) disability living allowance and (b) disability working allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: Recipients of both disability living allowance and disability working allowance will normally be able to choose whether to be paid in the form of an order book encashable at a post office, or automated credit transfer direct to a bank or building society account.

Child Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether widowed mothers, including war widows, will benefit from the increase in child benefit in October 1991.

Mr. Jack: It is our intention that the weekly rates of child dependency increases payable with widowed mother's allowance and of war widows' children's allowances, together with other benefits payable in respect of children, will not be affected by the increases in the rates of child benefit to be introduced in October 1991.

Local Offices, Bradford

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) permanent and (b) temporary staff are currently employed in the three Bradford offices; and what will be the numbers in each category from April under the district management unit.

Miss Widdecombe: The staffing position in the three Bradford offices on 26 March 1991 was as follows:

	Numbers
Bradford East
Permanent	113·5
Fixed-term contract	10

	Numbers
Casuals	7
Bradford South
Permanent	113·5
Fixed-term contract	20
Casuals	11
Bradford West
Permanent	120·5
Fixed-term contract	21·5
Casuals	12

The staffing position from 1 April 1991 is expected to be as follows:

	Numbers
Bradford East
Permanent	113·5
Fixed-term contract	4
Bradford South
Permanent	113·5
Fixed-term contract	18
Casuals	8
Bradford West
Permanent	119
Fixed-term contract	8
Casuals	4

It is planned to make seven of the fixed-term contract staff permanent throughout the DMU from 1 May 1991.

Direct Payments

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the social security benefits which it is not possible to have paid directly into the claimant's bank account; if he will specify in each case the reason why this facility is not available; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the social security benefits which it is possible to have paid directly into the claimant's bank account; and if he will specify in each case the date when this facility became available.

Miss Widdecombe: The facility for the payment of benefit directly into a bank account is limited to those benefits which are fully computerised.

Pending completion of the Department's computerisation programme, the following benefits are those currently payable by automated credit transfer direct to a bank or building society. Also shown are the dates when that facility was introduced:

	Year
Retirement pension/widows benefit	1982
Child benefit	1983
War pension	1983
Mobility allowance	1983
Attendance allowance	1985
Family credit	1988

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information local benefit offices are required to supply him with in regard to income support payments to residents of private residential or nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: Data are collected from the files of a 1 per cent. sample of all income support recipients in each local office. For people in residential care or nursing homes the income support data are the weekly amount in payment.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will conduct research into the effectiveness of the social security system in meeting the financial needs of people with AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Chief Adjudication Officer

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the sixth annual report of the Chief Adjudication Officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report is being published today. As last year, it finds considerable variation in standards of adjudication both in the Department of Social Security and the Employment Service, and makes a number of comments and recommendations for improvements. These are being considered, and will be the subject of a formal response in due course.

As the report recognises, the organisational changes currently being undertaken in conjuction with the inauguration of the Benefits Agency next month provide an opportunity to consider the scope for improving adjudication standards through greater specialisation in this work at the level of the new district offices. Although it makes no specific recommendation in this respect, I am arranging for the report's comments to be drawn to the attention of the agency's chief executive.

Community Charges Bill

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the provisions of the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill entail any alterations in social security regulations.

Mr. Newton: We will be laying regulations making consequential amendments to the community charge benefit scheme. They will provide that any claim for benefit which is made within 56 days of the receipt of a demand notice reflecting the new levels of community charge can, where appropriate, be backdated to 1 April 1991. The regulations will also revoke the existing rule which prevents community charge benefit being paid if it would amount to less than 50p per week, and make a number of other technical changes.

In view of the urgency the Social Security Advisory Committee has agreed to waive consultation on the regulations, which will be entirely beneficial.

Pensions

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 26 November 1990, Official Report, column 304, what are the figures at constant 1990 prices, retaining his original prices and earnings assumptions; and if he will also show (a) the SERPS entitlement at earnings equal to half the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions in each year at 1990 prices and (b) the category A national insurance pension in each year at 1990 prices.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 30 January 1991]: The information requested on SERPS entitlement is in the table. Figures for the state retirement pension are set out in table 5 1(b) of the October 1990 edition of the DSS "Abstract of Statistics" a copy of which is available in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage the citizens advice bureaux, SHAC and Shelter to use their grant in aid to give sufficient publicity to the availability of shorthold tenancies and to encourage private landlords to offer such accommodation.

Mr. Yeo: SHAC, Shelter and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux are receiving grant in aid in respect of work to relieve homelessness, part of which will involve advising people who are potentially homeless of the availability of other accommodation, including that in the private rented sector.

NACAB has been closely associated with the Department's continuing campaign to publicise the changes to private renting legislation, most recently with the booklet "Now it's worthwhile being a landlord' in October 1990.

Nitrogen Dioxide

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, columns 14-15, if he has any plans to establish monitoring stations for nitrogen dioxide levels at Cardiff or Swansea.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's intention to expand the air quality monitoring network was announced in the environment White Paper. A monitoring station will be established in Wales, but the site has yet to be decided.

Limehouse Link

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the mitigation agreement recently signed by the London Docklands development corporation and the contractors of the Limehouse link, Balfour Beatty and Fairclough joint venture, covering delays which occurred early in the project, involved additional payments from the Exchequer.

Mr. Key: No. LDDC had budgeted for potential contractors' claims. The costs of the mitigation agreement will therefore be met from within the corporation's existing resource provision and will not be funded by additional payments from the Exchequer.

Water Pollution (Monitoring)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance notes he has issued to large-scale industry concerning the impending transfer of responsibility for monitoring of water pollution by industry from the National Rivers Authority to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The NRA will continue to be responsible for monitoring and maintenance of water quality in controlled waters, and for discharges to controlled waters from non-prescribed processes. Discharges from prescribed processes will be the progressive responsibility of HMIP, resulting from IPC authorisations given under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

General guidance on standards and monitoring is outlined in the chief inspector's industry sector guidance notes to be published in April. Additional guidance will be given in the process, specific guidance notes to be published at least three months before IPC applications are required. Industry is a consultee to these guidance notes.

The memorandum of understanding between HMIP and the NRA, signed in December 1990, covers agreed procedures for dealing with the HMIP-NRA interface of responsibility for monitoring and enforcement of aqueous discharges from both prescribed and non-prescribed substances to controlled waters.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what value and percentage of capital receipts from the sale of local authority dwellings between 1980 and 1991 was spent each year by local authorities on (a) new building, (b) repairs and maintenance and (c) servicing of debt.

Mr. Yeo: We have no figures on the use of capital receipts from the sale of dwelling houses for these purposes. This is because capital receipts form one element of each authority's pooled capital resources. As from 1 April 1990 authorities have been required to set aside 75 per cent. of capital receipts from the sale of dwellings for debt redemption.

War Games

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether planning permission is required by those seeking to organise war games (a) on their own land or (b) on open land.

Mr. Yeo: The Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 grants planning permission for the temporary use of any land outside the curtilage of a building for war games, for up to 28 days in any calendar year. Use for more than 28 days requires specific planning permission.

The consultation paper "Planning Controls over Sites of Special Scientific Interest", issued on 13 March, proposes additional safeguards for SSSIs including the withdrawal of permitted development rights for war games. This consultation paper was announced in my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 13 March.

River Severn

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take following the representations he has received on the problems of pollution and flooding along the River Severn.

Mr. Baldry: Water pollution control in England and Wales is primarily the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority. Representations received by my Department about local water quality or pollution problems along the River Severn are referred to the NRA in the first instance. Matters relating to flooding are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much higher the estimated cost, and planned provision for HRAS rent rebate subsidy, in the years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94, would be were it not for the assumed transfer of rental income from the tenants of some councils reducing the estimated and planned cost of that subsidy.

Sir George Young: Under the new arrangements each authority receives sufficient HRA subsidy to meet any deficit on its assumed income and outgoings. The total contributions to rent rebates which local authorities make from their housing accounts are currently estimated to be £195 million in 1990-91 and £311 million in 1991-92. No decisions have yet been made for later years.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is (a) currently sponsoring any research and (b) has plans to sponsor future research into methods of the safe destruction and neutralisation of radioactive materials, including wastes.

Mr. Baldry: Research work is currently being carried out into dissolution of plastic materials contaminated with radioactivity. It is likely that the Department of the Environment will continue to fund this work in partnership with industry.

Currently there is no research work being carried out by the Department into the destruction of radioactive materials.

Further Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the amount of standard spending assessment for further education allocated to each local education authority, the principles on which this is allocated, including the formula used for student numbers, and the effect on the standard spending assessment, if any, of income generated by further education colleges.

Mr. Key: The standard spending assessment (SSA) element for post-16 education in 1991-92 is given in the table for each authority. The assessment includes provision for school pupils aged 16 years as well as those in further education. A separate element for further education is not identified. Details of the formula used to calculate this SSA and the overall number of students aged 16 years and over are given in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) as amended by the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England)—copies of these are in the Library. An estimate of fee and other income received by colleges is taken into account in calculating this element of the education SSA.

Gulf Pollution

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the extent of the ecological damage caused by the deliberate pollution of the Gulf and Kuwait.

Mr. Baldry: Reports available to me indicate that substantial environmental damage has occurred along parts of the coastline of Saudi Arabia between Khafji and the island of Abu Ali as a result of the oil slicks caused by deliberate release of oil into the Gulf. Damage to habitats such as seagrass beds, salt marshes and mangroves which are of particular importance as nursery grounds for fish and shellfish is likely to be severe and it has been estimated that 10,000 to 20,000 bird mortalities have occurred. However, a full picture must await a detailed ecological assessment of the coastline. In addition the most recent surveys show that offshore patches of light and weathered oil are now moving down the Gulf and affecting the coastline of Bahrain and Qatar.

Air emissions from the burning oilfields of Kuwait will also have significant local environmental effects through reduced sunlight, heat and isolated cases of acid deposition equivalent to the worst cases experienced in Europe in recent years.

Among the international experts and organisations seeking to assist the Gulf states in responding to these problems, the United Nations Environment Programme has now put in hand a programme for a more comprehensive assessment of environmental damage arising from the Gulf conflict which also draws on the expertise of the other United Nations agencies concerned.

British Waterways

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the attempts by British Waterways to sell property in advance of the British Waterways Bill being enacted; and if he will instruct the board of this organisation to refrain from the sale of any property which would relieve British Waterways of the responsibility which that measure would create.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the British Waterways Board (BWB) is proposing to sell at auction on 27 March some 60 properties as part of a programme of sale of low-income-yielding properties. The day-to-day responsibility for management of its property assets rests entirely with the BWB and the sale is in line with the integrated business strategy endorsed by the Government in February 1990.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will request British Waterways to refrain from extensive sale of the properties before the new management strategy has been completed and entered effective operation.

Mr. Baldry: The sale of surplus properties by the British Waterways Board is entirely consistent with the board's objectives and the integrated business strategy endorsed by the Government last year. Receipts help provide waterway improvements and thereby enhance the network for the benefit of all users.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what changes to existing compulsory competitive tendering practice he is considering in order to implement the measures indicated in his statement to the House of 21 March, Official Report, column 402;

(2) when he intends to introduce further local authority services into the scope of compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he plans to consult local authorities over his proposals to extend the scope of compulsory competitive tendering under the Local Government Act 1988 into housing management, legal services and computer services, as indicated in his statement in the House of 21 March, Official Report, column 402; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, will be looking at further local authority services to which competitive tendering could be applied. If further services are brought within the scope of the competitive tendering provisions of the Local Government Act 1988, consultation of local government representatives is a statutory requirement. If a new statutory framework is proposed, we shall want to take account of the views of local government in taking forward our proposals.

Environmental Health Officers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many environmental health officers have been employed by local authorities in England for each year since 1980.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) gave the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 12 March 1991, at column 477.

Highway Maintenance

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the implications for his Department's current review of finance and structure of local government of his reclassification of expenditure on highway structural maintenance on the primary route network as capital expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The review will take account of all relevant factors in examining the financial and structural arrangements for local government.

Local Government

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in his review of local government to date, he has considered the introduction of a regional tier of government in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment made clear in his statement to the House on 21 March, it seems likely that we shall move to a larger number of unitary authorities in England. The creation of a regional tier of local government does not feature in the Government's thinking.

Community Charge

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the information in his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 171-72, about local government support and average community charge once the figure for North Devon is available.

Mr. Key: North Devon has set an average community charge of £384 for 1991-92; if Parliament enacts the Community Charges (General Reduction) Bill, the new average charge will be £140 lower.

Estuaries

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many estuaries in England and Wales development or destruction is proceeding at a pace which he estimates is likely to damage the ecological character of those areas; and in how many of these their national or international obligation is to secure meaningful environmental protection.

Mr. Baldry: The Nature Conservancy Council's report "Nature Conservation and Estuaries in Great Britain" provides details of the main nature conservation interests of estuaries and the requirements to protect them. The report, which was published on 25 March, will be placed in the Library.

Air and Water Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the measures his Department will take to implement the EC Council of Environment Ministers directive of 18 March regarding (a) strict limits to toxic gas emissions by lorries and buses from 2 July 1992 and (b) the protection of urban towns with populations of more than 2,000 people from polluted waters by the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The first part of the question is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. As regards the second, member states are required to draw up programmes to implement the municipal waste water treatment directive by 31 December 1993, and these are currently under discussion with interested parties.

Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for consulting with non-government development organisations in the preparatory process for the United Nations conference on the environment and development to be held in Brazil in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 10 December 1990 to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) at column 266.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the year on year increase in standard spending assessment of (a) Westminster, (b) Blyth Valley, (c) North Tyneside, (d) Wansbeck, (e) Castle Morpeth and (f) Northumberland county council.

Mr. Key: The percentage increases in standard spending assessments between 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows: (a) 22·1, (b) 29·6, (c) 19·5, (d) 29·3, (e) 27·2, and (f) 18·9.

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the proportion of total local government spending financed by (a) the community charge, (b) the national non-domestic rate, (c) government grants and (d) rents and local charges.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 March 1991]: The proportion of budgeted expenditure in 1990-91 financed by the community charge net of community charge benefit and transitional relief is 28 per cent., by non-domestic rates is 29 per cent., and Government grants is 42 per cent., where Government grants comprise revenue support grant, special grants, specific grants in aggregate external finance, community charge benefits and transitional relief grant.

Some 55 per cent. of housing revenue account expenditure is financed by central Government subsidies (including rent rebates), 40 per cent. from rents borne by tenants (excluding rent rebates), with the remainder from other income and balances.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total sum (a) he expects to be raised in England from the community charge in the year 1991-92 and (b) raised by domestic rates in the year 1989-90, together with the percentage increase or decrease in the rates required to raise the sums raised in (a) above.

Mr. Key [holding answer 27 March 1991]: Local authorities have budgeted to raise £13·5 billion from community charges in 1991-92, but this is expected to be reduced to £8·7 billion by the proposed community charge grant. After taking account of the community charge reduction scheme and community charge benefits, community charge income is likely to be about £6·4 billion.

Domestic rate yield in 1989-90 is provisionally estimated at £9·8 billion; net of domestic rate rebates, the yield is £8·6 billion.

The decrease in rate yield required to raise £8·7 billion is 11·5 per cent. After taking into account the community charge reduction scheme and community charge benefits/rates rebates, the decrease is 25·0 per cent.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for England the percentage of local government net expenditure contributed by (a) central Government, (b) industrial and commercial rates and (c) domestic rates in the year 1978-79, and of (i) central Government, (ii) uniform business rate and (iii) the estimated community charge income for the year 1991-92.

Mr. Key [holding answer 27 March 1991]: In 1978-79 central Government contributed 58 per cent. of net expenditure through rate support grant and rate rebate grants. Non-domestic rates contributed 24 per cent. (of which commerce and industrial rates accounted for 20 per cent.), and domestic rates (net of domestic rate rebates) accounted for 17 per cent.

In 1991-92 central Government grants, including revenue support grant, community charge grant, area protection and inner London education grants, and community charge reduction scheme grant, are expected to account for 47 per cent. of net revenue expenditure (equivalent to the sum of standard spending assessments); receipts from the non-domestic rates pool account for a further 34 per cent.; and community charges (net of community charge benefit and CCRS) for 18 per cent.

Figures do not add to 100 per cent. because some expenditure is financed from reserves.

Energy and Environment Committee

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when was the last meeting of the standing committee on energy and the environment; what is its present membership; and when he next intends to convene a meeting.

Mr. Baldry: I know of no such committee, although my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy chairs a ministerial group on energy efficiency whose establishment was announced in the environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance".

House Purchase

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce measures which will protect house purchasers from incurring unreasonable expenses when one party to an informal agreement retracts before contracts are exchanged; and whether he will introduce legislation to require a non-returnable deposit to be paid by both parties to a house purchase contract immediately an offer is made and accepted, and prior to contracts being exchanged.

Mr. Yeo: I have no plans to do so. The law already accommodates several methods of buying and selling property. Buyers and sellers are free to insist on a pre-contract deposit, if they wish, in order to reduce the expenditure wasted when one of the parties withdraws before contracts are exchanged.

Satellite Dish Antennae

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has completed his review of the proposed changes to the regulations covering the siting of satellite dish antennae which was announced following the merger of British Satellite Broadcasting and Sky Television.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have given careful consideration to the implications of the merger. Their concern in originally proposing a general permission for two dishes per dwelling house was to ensure fair competition between major operators in the satellite broadcasting field. In the circumstances following the merger, they see no immediate case for pressing ahead with a general permission for two dishes.

They propose, therefore, to retain the present general permission for one dish per dwelling house, but to go ahead with the other proposals which they made in November to secure better protection of visual amenity and sensitive areas. A small change is being made to the proposed definition of the size of a dish to bring it into line with current practice in the industry. The necessary amendments to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order will be laid in Parliament shortly. I should however make clear that, should the Independent Television Commission license another significant direct broadcasting by satellite (DBS) provider or should another major satellite service emerge that cannot be received by means of an Astra aerial, they would consider the case for moving back to a general permission for two dishes. They look to the industry to press ahead with technical innovation which will lessen the impact of these dishes on visual amenity.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in relation to development proposals for wind farms and other kinds of renewable energy installations.

Sir George Young: The Government's policy on renewable energy is set out in the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans).

Local planning authorities should keep in mind the Government's policy on renewable sources of energy when preparing their development plans and in considering development proposals for renewable energy installations. In general, the planning system operates on the principle that planning permission should be granted unless the development proposal would cause demonstrable harm to interests of acknowledged importance; and those who decide planning applications and appeals must give clear and well-founded reasons for refusing permission. Within this framework, authorities should pay attention to the desirability of energy sources which do not result in emissions of gases harmful to the environment such as carbon dioxide; such sources of energy should be harnessed wherever practicable. Equally, authorities should pay attention to the need to protect the local environment from damage and any loss of amenity which renewable energy installations may cause. Such loss of amenity may include any noise or smell likely to arise from the installations, and their visual impact on the countryside.

The Departments of Energy and of the Environment and the Welsh Office are preparing planning policy guidance about this for local authorities. I hope that a draft of such guidance will be ready to issue for public

"The Three Graces"

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to decide whether the statue of "The Three Graces", previously at Woburn abbey, is or was part of a listed building.

Sir George Young: In the light of all the available evidence and further legal advice, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided that the statue is not part of the listed building. He believes that the question whether the statue is part of a listed building turns on the question whether it was a fixture at the date of listing of the Woburn sculpture gallery in 1961. In deciding that question, he has applied the common law tests—degree of annexation and purpose of annexation. Although absolute certainty is not possible, he considers that the balance of argument is firmly against the statue having been a fixture in 1961.

It follows from my right hon. Friend's decision that the question of listed building enforcement action no longer arises. He has also reconsidered the need for public consultation on the issue of controls over moveable fixtures in listed buildings, as previously envisaged. He is no longer persuaded that separate consultation on this issue is required. He intends, however, to include advice on the matter in forthcoming planning policy guidance. A draft of this guidance (which would replace DoE circular 8/87) will be issued for public consultation later this year.

I have placed in the Library a copy of the letter which has been sent to the solicitors acting for the owners of the statue, setting out in full the basis of my right hon. Friend's decision.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Passports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British passports have been issued to foreign nationals in 1987, 1988 and 1989, broken down by year and country of origin.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: United Kingdom passports are issued to British citizens, including those who have been naturalised. British nationals (overseas), British overseas citizens, British subjects and British protected persons. In some cases, passports may be issued to persons who also hold the nationality of another country, but information about dual nationality of this kind is not collected.

Youth Custody

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people aged below 18 years were held in youth custody in 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 30 June 1990 about 970 sentenced young offenders aged under 18 were held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. Of these, about 820 had been sentenced to detention in a young offender institution, 140 to detention under the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 and about 10 to detention in default of payment of a fine, compensation order or costs.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the number of people who were sentenced to youth custody in 1988, 1989 and 1990; and how many (a) came from a one-parent family, (b) came from a home where there had been a marriage break-up, or (c) had no parents.

Mr. John Patten: In England and Wales in 1988, a total of 24,118 offenders were detained in a young offender institution. The figure fell to 19,092 in 1989. Data for 1990 are not yet available. This information is published annually in volumes 1 and 2 of the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which are in the Library. Information is not collected centrally on the family background of these offenders.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of keeping a person in youth custody.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average weekly cost of keeping a person in an open and closed youth establishment in 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, was £459 and £346 respectively.

Durham Prison

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per woman inmate in H wing of Durham prison per week.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of keeping a woman in H wing of Durham prison is not separately available. The average weekly cost of holding an inmate in Durham prison in 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, was £260.

Police Officers

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in London have taken early retirement in each of the past five years who have (a) been suspended, (b) taken extended sick leave or (c) were being investigated for any alleged offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Somali Nationals

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what order applications for entry of Somalians into Britain are processed; and if there is a priority system for urgent cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Somali family reunion applications are processed in order of their receipt in the Home Office. We consider requests for priority only in exceptional cases.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants are working on processing applications of Somalians wishing to join their families in Britain.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 18 civil servants employed in the asylum division engaged among other duties in processing Somali family reunion cases. There are also a small number of entry clearance officers at posts outside Somalia who give some time to this work.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time it takes for applications to be processed for Somalians wishing to enter Britain to be reunited with their families; and what is the longest time for any one case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At present, because of conditions in the Horn of Africa, Somali family reunion applicants may, if they wish, lodge an application through a sponsor in the United Kingdom direct to the Home Office, rather than at a post abroad, as would normally be required. The average time between receipt of an application in the asylum division and a decision is 14 months. The oldest unresolved Somali family reunion application was received on 30 November 1989.

Channel Islands

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Mr. Geoffrey Cooper about the maladministration of justice in the Channel Island of Jersey under his responsibility for the good government of those islands.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between 1982 and 1987, we received from Mr. Cooper or from two hon. Members on his behalf representations that the United Kingdom Government should intervene in the administration of justice in Jersey, particularly in light of the conduct and outcome of civil litigation there involving Mr. Cooper. As was explained in reply to each such representation, we have found no reason so to intervene.

Parking Offences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parking tickets have been received and paid by his Department in each year since 1988 in respect of official vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Most fixed penalty notices are served direct on the driver of a vehicle, for payment by the driver in accordance with departmental rules; no record is kept of these. The number of fixed penalty notices to owner in respect of parking offences served on the Home Office was:

1988 — 9
1989 — 8
1990 — 6

These were forwarded to the drivers of the vehicles for them to pay.

In exceptional circumstances, drivers may be reimbursed from official funds; details of such payments are not recorded separately and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the application for British citizenship submitted by Ms. Farhat Yasmin on 16 May 1989, Ref. F190117/2, will be considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Consideration of the case has now started and a decison will be taken when the necessary inquiries have been completed.

Forensic Science

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Association of Chief Constables concerning the impact of the impending new charging system for Home Office forensic science laboratory work on the efficiency of large scale murder inquiries using (a) DNA testing and (b) other exhaustive advanced forensic technology.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Discussions have taken place between senior managers in the forensic science service and representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers about the impact of the new charging systems on the full range of services provided for the police by the service. Discussions on specific requests take place locally.

HEALTH

GP Budgets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the names and addresses of the general practices that will be budget holding from 1 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available centrally. Regional health authorities are announcing details of fund-holding practices in their regions as they approve them.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many practices received the payment of £16,000 to help them prepare for general practitioner fund-holding status;

(2) what has been the total level of grant payments for expenditure by his Department for prospective general practioner fund holders; and what was the amount, if any, paid to practices not becoming fund holders in April.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 19 March 1991]: The information, based upon estimates available at 25 March, on payments of preparatory allowance to prospective GP fund-holders is provided in the table. These payments have been used by the practices concerned to improve the quality of their management systems, which will be of benefit to patients. A number of those receiving payments in 1990-91 have chosen not to become fundholders from 1 April 1991 but continue to prepare themselves for fund-holding status from April 1992. Information on other payments made to potential fundholders in respect of computer systems is not available as it is not separately identifiable.

Annual Accounts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if (a) general practitioner fund holders and (b) national health service trusts will be obliged to publish annual accounts.

Mr. Waldegrave: General practitioner fund holders are required to submit annual accounts to the family health services authority (FHSA) within six weeks of the end of the financial year. These are included in the FHSA's accounts in summary form, which will be audited by the Audit Commission. The FHSA's accounts, including the summary, are submitted to me. There has never been a requirement that these should be published and I do not propose to introduce such a change.

There is similarly no requirement for national health service trusts to publish annual accounts. However, each national health service trust is required to present its annual report, audited accounts and any report on those accounts made by the auditor at a public meeting which the trust is required to hold in every calendar year except the year in which it becomes operational.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations cover publication of the annual accounts of general practitioner fund holders and national health service trusts.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 98(2)c of the National Health Service Act 1977 inserted by section 20(2)b of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 requires fund-holding practices to submit their annual accounts to the family health services authority. There is no requirement to publish these accounts.

Similarly, national health service trusts are not required to publish annual accounts. However, under schedule 2, paragraph 7 of the Act and National Health Service Trusts (Public Meetings) Regulations 1991, SI No. 482, each national health service trust is required to hold a public meeting every year except the one in which it becomes operational, at which it is required to present its annual report, audited accounts and any report on those accounts made by the auditor.

Child Guidance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response has been made to his Department to a request from the Brixton child guidance unit of Camberwell health authority for support for the Brixton child guidance team.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have made it clear to health and social services authorities in the White Paper "Caring for People" that provision for children with psychological problems is a key component of a proper locally based service for people with a mental illness. There are also important links to be made to the education service. It must be for these authorities to judge what priority they can give to such services in the context of overall local pressure and resources.

I will be responding to the request in similar terms.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with rheumatoid arthritis pay prescription charges; and what would be the annual cost of exempting this group.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available.

Bio Products Laboratory

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the reply of 14 February, Official Report, columns 553-54, if he will list the reasons why the Bio Products Laboratory, as a special health authority, is not being made fully accountable for its income and expenditure; and whether these will be reported.

Mr. Dorrell: The Bio Products Laboratory (BPL) is the manufacturing arm of the Central Blood Laboratory Authority (CBLA). The CBLA is a special health authority which does account for the performance of all parts of the organisation and produces an annual report.

Exhibitions

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to organ transplantation to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 22 to 26 April.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average (a) length of service and (b) age of speech therapists employed by the health service; and what is the percentage of female speech therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The precise information requested is not available centrally. The table shows the largest number of speech therapists employed by the health service in England were in the 25 to 29 age band at 30 September 1989. A total of 98 per cent. of speech therapists in England at 30 September 1989 were female.

[1] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest whole-time equivalent.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of speech therapists employed by the health service left their employment in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The only centrally available figures are for the year ended 31 March 1989 when there were 480 leavers in England. Of these 301 left the national health service; the remainder moved to other health authorities.

Ambulance Service

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued by the Government regarding the disciplinary procedures to be taken when members of the ambulance service are accused of misconduct; and what provisions exist to ensure that management follow these procedures correctly.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Procedures for dealing with individual disciplinary cases are entirely a matter for the employing authority. Serious matters are handled in accordance with an agreement of the General Whitley Council.

Census

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans for either a statement advertising or a statement on the census form to assure members of the public that information provided in their answers to census questions will not be used to compile registers for any local government tax.

Mr. Dorrell: Personal information from the completed census forms will not be made available to anyone outside the census offices, including those compiling registers for the community charge or any other local charge. It would be against the law to do so. The following message is included in the information leaflet which will be delivered to every household with the census form:

"The information you put on your census form is used only to produce statistics. The Census Offices and their staff are bound by law to make sure that the information you give on your form remains secret and safe. The completed forms will be kept confidential and only used to produce information about the population in general. The Census Offices will not give any information about identified people or households to anyone else, in central government or elsewhere."

Further, each census form contains a personal assurance from the Registrar-General that the answers will be treated in strict confidence and used only to produce statistics.

The census offices are also publicising the message elsewhere, for example, in background leaflets, posters and advertisements.

Southampton General Hospital

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Deparment is to compensate Southampton general hospital for the value added tax required to be paid on the cost of the construction of the children's cancer ward and development unit raised by the Piam Brown Child Cancer Fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The arrangements whereby the NHS could in some circumstances reclaim VAT on construction work ceased in April 1990 and health authorities' resources have been increased to compensate. I understand that the allocations of compensation made by Wessex region included an element to Southampton health authority.

Iraqi Hospitals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the World Health Organisation, UNICEF or the Red Cross about sewage pipes burst under Iraqi hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 27 March.

Access to Health Records Act

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has any plans to give publicity to the coming into force of the Access to Health Records Act on 1 November.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans for publicity beyond guidance which the Department will issue to the national health service. This guidance will explain the provisions of the Act and the steps which should be taken to ensure compliance.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has implemented a training programme relating to the coming into force of the Access to Health Records Act 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: No. The Department will issue guidance to the national health service. It will be a matter for individual health authorities to bring this guidance to the attention of their staff and to ensure that it is followed.

Community Care

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implications for community care policy of the statement of 21 March by the Secretary of State for the Environment on the funding and structure of local government.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for managing social services, including the phased introduction of community care between 1 April 1991 and 1 April 1993, will continue to rest with local government.

Middle East

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from medical experts and doctors about the trend in the scale of the epidemic in the middle east.

Mr. Dorrell: None. However, the Department is in touch with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the question of humanitarian assistance to the middle east and Iraq and Kuwait in particular.

Services for the Deaf

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric consultants can communicate in sign language with deaf patients; and where they practice.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the services for which there is supra-regional funding and indicate those which provide services specifically related to deafness.

Mr. Dorrell: The following services will be designated and funded as supra-regional services in 1991-92:

Choriocarcinoma services
Craniofacial services
Heart, heart-lung and lung transplantation
Liver transplantation
Specialised liver services
Neonatal and infant cardiac surgery
Services for primary bone tumours
Spinal injury units
Treatment of retinoblastoma
Treatment of arterio-venous malformations by stereotactic radiosurgery
Psychiatric services for deaf people

The last-named service is the only one which is related specifically to deafness.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the future provision of psychiatric services for the deaf presently provided at Whittingham hospital;

(2) what steps he is taking to resolve the financial position of psychiatric services for the deaf planned for Prestwich hospital.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the representations he has received regarding the re-location of the department of psychiatry for the deaf at Whittingham hospital; and what response he has made.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the right hon. and hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 26 March at column 370.

We have received 10 letters from hon. Members. Officials have also received correspondence from the consultant psychiatrist involved in the provision of the service, and from the principal national organisation representing deaf people.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric departments there are in the United Kingdom which specifically provide for profoundly deaf people and where specialists can communicate with deaf patients in sign language.

Mr. Dorrell: There are psychiatric units which specifically provide for the needs of profoundly deaf people at Whittingham hospital near Preston and Springfield hospital in Wandsworth. It is open to psychiatric units to obtain sign language services where they are needed to communicate with deaf patients.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaf people, reliant on sign language for communication, are (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients in psychiatric hospitals; and how many psychiatric hospitals have patients who are reliant on sign language.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to local authorities as to the amount of direct provision of residential care for the elderly they should retain in order to meet their obligations under the National Assistance Act 1948.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The policy guidance "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond", issued to local authorities in November, made it clear that direct provision of services by local authorities is expected to continue to play an important part in the new mixed economy of care. It also stated that authorities should introduce changes in their service provision at a pace appropriate to their organisation and plans. The extent of direct provision of services is for local authorities to determine having regard to local factors.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has undertaken into the comparative life expectancy of elderly persons in residential establishments as against those living independently in the community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 15 March at column 707. The Department has not undertaken research bearing directly on this subject.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to local authorities in respect of the placement of (a) elderly persons who have been assessed as financially able to pay the full costs of care provided and (b) persons eligible for social security benefits, as between part III accommodation and care home trusts or private homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions about residential placements should follow assessment of the individual's needs and consideration of the range of residential care available, not the financial resources of the individual. As explained in the White Paper "Caring for People", individuals should be able to exercise the maximum possible choice about the home they enter. They should be able to look for a place in a more expensive home if they or their relatives and friends wish and are able to make a contribution towards the cost of care. Social services authorities will be expected to make maximum possible use of independent providers when arranging placements.

Children's Hospital, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decision has been made by the North Western regional health authority as to whether the new children's hospital planned for Greater Manchester will be allowed to opt out; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The North Western regional health authority has agreed in principle to proceed with a children's tertiary referral centre with St. Mary's hospital, central Manchester, as the preferred location. No firm decision on the timing of the development has been made.

If this goes ahead, there are a number of possibilities: the centre may form part of Manchester central Hospitals and Community Care National Health Service Trust; remain a directly managed unit; or seek to become a trust in its own right.

Eye Operations

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye cataract operations were carried out within the national health service in the years 1978-79 and 1989-90; and what was the success rate for each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities in England reported that 92,244 cataract operations were carried out in the year 1989-90. The figure for 1979 was 39,700. Information on the outcome of cataract operations is not held centrally.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting time for an eye cataract operation on the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about waiting times is available by the specialty of intended treatment, not by specific condition.

Prozac

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adverse reaction yellow cards related to Prozac there have been in the last six months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has received 370 reports of suspected adverse reactions to Prozac in the last six months. A report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily mean that the reaction was caused by the drug.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his experts last reviewed the safety of the anti-depressant drug Prozac; and what advice they gave regarding the possibility of side effects.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The anti-depressant, Prozac, is a relatively new drug and therefore its safety is reviewed on a monthly basis. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has examined the possibility that Prozac may be associated with suicidal thoughts or violent behaviour. The committee concluded that the available evidence does not support this hypothesis. The safety of Prozac will be kept under review.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priority is given to cervical smear test results of patients with known abnormalities such as cancer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Department of Health guidance to health authorities on cervical screening states that it is essential that all abnormal smears are followed up. Information on local arrangements is not held centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people with AIDS in Great Britain at the time the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys was undertaking its research on the prevalence of disability.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Office of Population Censuses and Survey's research was undertaken between 1985 and 1988. Data on AIDS cases are collected by the communicable disease surveillance centre (CDSC) and communicable disease (Scotland) unit (CD(S)U). The information is as follows:

Year	Cases reported to CDSC and CD(S)U	Known deaths	People alive
1985	393	188	205
1986	848	451	397
1987	1,490	793	697
1988	2,319	1,192	1,127

Oil Wells, Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what equipment has been made available to British troops still in Kuwait and the Kuwaiti Government for use by Kuwaiti residents to protect against the hydrocarbons released from the burning oil wells.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

No equipments have been specifically requested or provided to protect either British troops or Kuwaitis against smoke from the burning oil wells, although we are continuing to assess the effects of the hydrocarbons being released. Further quantitative and qualitative analysis of the longer-term effects from the hydrocarbons released is being undertaken in liaison with the United States and Saudi civilian environmental health officials.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give, for employment training, the total number and percentage of trainees with special needs in each of the years 1988-89 and 1989-90 for Great Britain and each of the standard regions plus Scotland and Wales; and if he will provide an estimate of special needs places in 1990-91 and 1991-92 for Great Britain and each of the TEC areas.

Mr. Jackson: Employment training is aimed at long-term unemployed people, many of whom have special training needs. Some groups are identified separately and the table gives details of these groups as a proportion of all starts in 1988-89 and in 1989-90. Actual numbers are not available. No forecasts are available for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees were on employment training for each of the last 24 months; and what numbers are planned in future.

Mr. Jackson: Numbers in training on ET for the last 24 months are given in the table. Negotiations are still underway with training and enterprise councils in relation to planned numbers of ET trainee weeks and outputs delivered in 1991-92.

Tourism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the prospects for the tourist industry in 1991; and what assessment he has made of the percentage change in the proportion of British holidaymakers remaining in the United Kingdom this year.

Mr. Forth: The English tourist board has made no assessment of the proportion of British holidaymakers likely to stay in the United Kingdom this year. Latest available figures show that 79 per cent. of holidays taken by United Kingdom residents in 1989 were spent in the United Kingdom. My Department is giving its full support to the tourist board's "Britain's Great" campaign which is designed to promote holidays at home in 1991. We are also making available an additional £800,000 to the British Tourist Authority to market Britain overseas in the aftermath of the Gulf war.

Marine Safety

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many deaths and serious accidents have taken place among waterways employees during each year since 1980.

Mr. Forth: Injuries to employees arising from inland water transport services, occurring in the years 1986-87 to 1989-90 (provisional), as reported[1] to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the listed principal causes for deaths and serious accidents of waterways workers.

Information for earlier years was reported under different legislation and recorded under a different computerised coding system, not separately identifying the inland waterway sector.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he has taken to ensure that employers of waterways workers are made fully aware of the importance of employers' safety policies.

Mr. Forth: Section 2(3) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974—HSW—requires every employer of five or more persons to prepare and keep up to date a written statement of his general policy with respect to the health and safety of his employees, and the organisation and arrangements for carrying out that policy and bringing it to the attention of his employees.

During visits to employers of waterways workers engaged in activities for which the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—is the enforcing authority for health and safety legislation, HSE inspectors remind employers of their duties under the HSW Act and pursue their enquiries and any enforcement action to the highest levels where standards of compliance do not measure up to those required.

In addition, the Health and Safety Commission and HSE have published general guidance for employers on the preparation of safety policies.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, following privatisation of ports, he will set up a system to monitor the health and safety of workers on rivers and canals.

Mr. Forth: The privatisation of ports does not affect the legislation already in place which imposes duties on employers, as well as masters and owners of vessels to ensure the health and safety of workers on rivers and canals. There is therefore no need to set up a further monitoring system.

Work Accidents

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the fatal and serious accident rates of (a) waterways workers, (b) workers in the steel industry, (c) railway workers and (d) seamen in each of the last three years.

Mr. Forth: The available information is provided in the tables. Injury numbers in respect of waterways employees in Great Britain are available, but the employment data required for the calculation of injury incidence rates are not.

[5] Steel industry injuries cannot be separately identified from those occurring in the metal manufacturing industry as a whole. Metal manufacturing is defined by SIC80—Class 22.

This legislation categorises all non-fatal injuries causing over 3 days absence from work as an "over 3 day" injury. Major injuries are not separately classified. Injuries to merchant seamen injured on-shore and therefore falling within the jurisdiction of the HSE, cannot be distinguished from those occurring to dockers and other workers in shore establishments.

[7] The fatal injury incidence rate for 1987 includes the 38 deaths of crew members in the Herald of Free Enterprise Disaster.

Youth Training, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the closure or planned closure of youth training schemes and places in the Manchester TEC area since that TEC became operational.

Mr. Jackson: Manchester TEC decides on which youth training providers to contract with, taking into account the quality of training offered and value for money.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the provision of special needs youth training in the Manchester TEC area.

Mr. Jackson: I am satisfied that adequate provision is available to meet the needs of all those young people with special training needs in the Manchester training and enterprise council area.

Higher Qualifications

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people by higher qualifications held, by sex, for Great Britain and each of the standard regions in spring 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Preliminary results are available from the 1990 labour force survey. As they form an extensive set of tables, I will write to the hon. Member giving the information requested.

NACRO, Bradford

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance has been given to TECs on dealing with training providers covering special groups; which National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders—employment training providers will not be funded in 1991-92; how many days' notice of closure was given to Bradford NACRO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils have a contractual requirement to meet the training needs of individuals in certain special groups. It is for TECs to decide in the light of local circumstances with which providers they will contract. My Department does not keep information on the training providers with whom TECs sign contracts or details of their contract negotiations.

Coats Viyella plc

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed takeover of the Tootal Group plc by Coats Viyella on employment levels in the textile industry in Ribbel Valley.

Mr. Jackson: I have made no such assessment.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the average hours worked per week for full-time workers in manufacturing mineral extraction, energy and water industries for each of the countries of the European Community.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is contained in the Eurostat labour force survey results of 1988, table 55, which is in the House of Commons Library.

Single Parents

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of (a) all mothers with children aged 16 years or under, (b) mothers with children aged 16 years and under without working husbands, (c) single parent men with children aged 16 years or under and (d) single parent women with children aged 16 years or under that area (i) in full-time employment and (ii) in part-time employment.

Mr. Jackson: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Training (Special Needs)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number and percentage of youth training trainees with special needs in 1988-89 and in 1989-90 for Great Britain, Scotland, Wales and each of the standard regions; and if he will provide an estimate of special needs youth training places in 1990-91 and 1991-92 for Great Britain, Scotland, Wales and each standard region and each TEC area.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 4 March 1991]: The table gives information about those joining youth training for whom special training needs funding is paid for 1989-90. Information is not available for 1988-89 on a comparable basis and no forecasts are available for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) Official Report, 25 February, column 353, how many of the export licence applications refused in 1989 and 1990 were made, respectively, for exports to (a) Iraq and (b) member countries of the allied coalition in Operation Granby in the Gulf.

Mr. Sainsbury: Refusals of export licence applications in 1990 were as follows:

(a) Iraq—38.

(b) Member countries of the allied coalition—69.

Figures for 1989 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Timeshare

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the current arrangements for regulation of the timeshare industry at home and abroad; and whether he has any plans to change them.

Mr. Leigh: The timeshare industry is subject to the general law of contract and, where appropriate, to existing consumer protection legislation.

Mailshots and award schemes are covered by the codes of practice administered by the Advertising Standards Authority. These codes are voluntary but, where they fail, the Director General of Fair Trading can take action under the Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations. He can apply to the courts for an injunction to prevent the publication or continued publication of an advertisement. In some circumstances the Consumer Credit Act may apply. The Trade Descriptions Act would apply if, for example, false statements are made about facilities at a resort.

As I announced on 18 February, I have accepted in principle the recommendations of the Director General of Fair Trading for changes to the Trade Descriptions Act to tighten controls on statements about services and to bring timeshare award schemes within the scope of that Act. They will be dealt with as part of the general review of the Act.

Since most timeshares are located abroad, and much of the selling also takes place abroad, further regulation, to be effective, needs to be at Community level. The Commission has accordingly been made aware of the Government's view that Community action is necessary to implement the Director General of Fair Trading's recommendations for a prospectus for prospective buyers, a cooling off period and protection of deposit moneys.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effects of his Department's policy on the implementation of the reforms of the brewing industry on tenants and licensees of public houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have done a considerable amount to improve the position of tenants. In particular, we have enacted the Landlord and Tenant (Licenced Premises) Act 1990 in response to concerns tenants had over security of tenure. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to assess the effectiveness of the measures introduced following the MMC's report on the supply of beer in late 1993 when they will have had time to take effect. The Secretary of State and I keep in regular contact with the National Licensed Victuallers Association and the brewers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the reforms of the brewing industry sought by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 March 1991]: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), on 27 March, columns 433-4.

Licensed Trade Tenants

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from the licensed trade about the position of tenants threatened with eviction by breweries.

Mr. Redwood: Written representations have been received from about 40 tenants of one of the major brewers expressing concern about letters they had received from that brewer informing them that they were likely to be sent "notices to quit" by the summer.

Kuwait

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Taunton of 20 March, what his Department is doing to ensure that appropriate medium-sized and small companies are able to play a part in the reconstruction of Kuwait.

Mr. Sainsbury: Small and medium-sized companies are welcome to register their interest with my Department's Kuwait reconstruction co-ordination team. They will also be in a position to receive information from the British industry task force in Kuwait through the trade associations which are represented on the joint DTI/industry subgroups covering the main sectors of reconstruction work. We see a major role for them in supplying the larger contractors.

In addition to the trade fair programme for the Gulf area it is likely that a number of trade fairs more directly associated with Kuwait will be organised, at which small and medium-sized firms will be expected to participate.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller), of 8 March, Official Report, column 304, what interest has been indicated to (a) his projects and export division and (b) his overseas trade division's Kuwait desk from environmental consultancy companies seeking contracts in Kuwait to provide environmental and ecological restoration.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 March 1991]: My Department has had approximately 5,000 inquiries from companies seeking work in the reconstruction of Kuwait including a number of environmental consultancy companies. Their details are being entered on to a computerised database, but until this is completed the full information requested will not be easily available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when I have the information he requested.

Postal Services

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what checks are made by his Department on the efficiency of international postal collections and deliveries to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department makes no such checks. These are operational matters for the Post Office, which regularly monitors the quality of both incoming and outgoing international postal services. I understand that the results of these checks are made available to, and discussed with, the Post Office Users National Council.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden), Official Report, 1 March, column 657, if he will set out the reasons why Iraq is excluded from the list of middle east countries listed; and if he will publish comparable data for exports to Iraq.

Mr. Lilley: My answer on 1 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) did in fact include Iraq in the definition of the middle east. Unfortunately, because of an error, the word "Iraq" did not appear in the Official Report but the Editor has been asked by my Department to rectify this for the bound volume.

The table shows the value of exports to Iraq from the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan for the 12 months ending June 1990, the latest 12-month period for which complete information is available.

Market Information

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many substantive inquiries were made under the market information inquiries scheme for each month from March 1990 to date;

(2) how many major inquiries were made by businesses under the market information inquiries scheme for each month from March 1990 to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: The table lists the numbers of market information inquiries billed to customers, in the financial year 1989-90 and between April 1990 and February 1991. The list shows the substantial increase in the sales of the service in 1990-91 against those in 1989-90.

Total	3,370	269,751

Charges for the market information inquiry service are baanded and are no longer split between "major" and "substantive".

Export Services

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide an update of the figures on export services given in his answer of 22 January 1990, Official Report, columns 503-4.

Mr. Sainsbury: The following figures show gross and net expenditure by the Department on export services[6] in constant price terms:

£ million (1979-80 prices)

Year	Gross expenditure	Net expenditure
1979-80	25·7	21·2
1980-81	19·5	15·8
1981-82	19·4	15·4
1982-83	21·0	16·6
1983-84	20·8	15·5
1984-85	[1]24·6	[1]18·8
1985-86	[2]24·6	[2]17·4
1986-87	24·6	15·5
1987-88	[3]23·4	[3]14·7
1988-89	[4][5]25·3	[4]16·5
1989-90	[5]23·8	16·6

[1] Expenditure on publicity and promotion was transferred from the COI budget with effect from 1984-85. On a constant price basis, the expenditure amounted to £1·4 million in 1984-85.

[2] Export Intelligence Service revenue was transferred to the exports budget from another DTI budget with effect from 1985-86. On a constant price basis this reduced net expenditure by £0·3 million in 1985-86.

[3] Includes expenditure on publications for the then Statistics and Market Intelligence Library previously treated as part of general library expenditure (value £0·2 million on a constant price basis).

[4] Figures for 1988-89 include grant-in-aid to the International Customs Tariff Bureau (value £0·038 million on a constant price basis), and the "New Products from Britain" service transferred from the FCO in the second half of the year (value £0·2 million on a constant price basis).

[5] Excludes expenditure on British Pavilion for EXPO 92 in Seville.

[6] Programme expenditure only—does not include manpower and running costs.

All figures have been converted using the implied GDP factor cost deflator.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effect of the recent increase in VAT on manufacturers and wholesalers of pre-price-marked goods currently in stock and unsold before the price increase takes effect.

Mr. Leigh: Traders selling to the consumer must ensure that he is not misled as to the price at which they are offering goods for sale. If a retailer decides to recover the increase in the rate of VAT in respect of pre-price marked goods, he will have to ensure that the consumer is not misled as to their price. It would be for the retailer and the manufacturer or wholesaler to agree on whom the burden of any necessary relabelling should fall.

Estate Agents

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will implement the proposals announced last year to strengthen the law governing the regulation of estate agents.

Mr. Leigh: I am today laying orders and regulations under the Estate Agents Act 1979 to improve standards in the conduct of estate agency. I am convinced that these measures will deal effectively with malpractices by estate agents and significantly improve consumer protection. The Estate Agents (Specified Offences) Order will come into effect on 13 May and the Estate Agents (Undesirable practices) Order and the Estate Agents (Provision of Information) Regulations will come into force on 29 July.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the threat posed to British forces involved in Operation Granby from Iraqi possession of French-made technology.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Though it is not the practice to release information on threat assessments, potential and actual threats to the security of Her Majesty's armed forces are kept under constant review.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rounds of depleted uranium shells and bullets were fired by allied forces in the Gulf war; and what steps have been taken to clean up the desert areas where such radioactive ammunition was used.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A small proportion of the ammunition used by British forces during the conflict in the Gulf contained depleted uranium. The use of such material by other allied forces is a matter for the countries concerned. The uranium 235 content of these rounds is less than that which occurs naturally, and any residual hazard to health from such rounds would be minimal.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields), of 19 March, Official Report, column 153, he will set out the methodology used to calculate the disaggregated breakdown of the £1·75 billion additional costs incurred by the United Kingdom through participation in military activities in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figure of about £1·75 billion comprises two elements: the value of major equipments lost and munitions consumed in the conflict and in associated training (on present estimates totalling about £450 million); and the additional costs of preparing for and participating in the conflict (assessed at about £1,300 million). The latter element includes some £700 million for new equipment and modifications; £200 million for sea and air transport; and £400 million for other operating costs both in and out of theatre. Costs yet to be incurred or assessed will include the recovery, maintenance and repair of equipment, the replacement of stores, the bringing of equipment back to common modification standards, and the consequential effects of the conflict on the defence programme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the United Kingdom service men killed in friendly fire action in the Gulf war were hit by depleted uranium radioactive bullets fired by United States forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The investigations into the incidents in which British service men were killed or injured by friendly fire are not yet complete.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 March, column 90, which British defence companies sent staff to the Gulf region in support of Operation Granby; what type of staff were sent; and how many staff each company sent.

Mr. Alan Clarke: These details are a matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect Operation Granby will have on planning the level of logistical support for BAOR units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work is continuing to determine the size and shape of the Army's logistic support under "Options for Change", and account will be taken of any Granby lessons learned in this area.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect Operation Granby had on the level of maintenance available to those armoured units that remained in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Operation Granby has had an effect on maintenance and spares support for vehicles belonging to units in Germany. I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 28 November 1990 at column 446.

Training Courses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to answer questions on the numbers of students from specific foreign countries on his departmental training courses.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our normal practice is not to disclose details of military training provided for Foreign and Commonwealth countries as these are generally confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned. There are no plans to change this.

Nuclear Facility (Israel)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the Iraqi Scud missile attacks on the Israeli nuclear facility at Dimona.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Iraq claimed on 17 February that during the previous evening it had fired three Scud missiles towards Dimona in Israel and one missile against Haifa. We have no information that the Scud attacks against Israel that night caused any casualties or damage.

Embassy, Baghdad

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to post a military attaché to the British embassy in Baghdad.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to reply. He will answer shortly.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report all representations his Department has received in each year, respectively, since 1987 from (a) Committees of Parliament, (b) non-governmental organisations, (c) associations of elected authorities and (d) individuals on the subject of the disposal of nuclear submarines.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence has received a number of representations on the subject of the disposal of nuclear submarines and related issues since 1987. These have been from a range of individuals and organisations.

Aeroplane Crash

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the national identity of the pilots killed in each aeroplane crash during training over the area of the present constituency of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There has been one fatal military aircraft accident in the present constituency of Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale since 1979. The accident involved a United States air force F111 aircraft, and occurred near Lauder on 28 July 1987. The pilot was American.

"Options for Change"

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there will be any additional expenditure (a) as a total and (b) per head on retraining and resettling service personnel staff who are made redundant as a consequence of "Options for Change";

(2) whether there will be any changes in the length or scope of pre-release training offered to his Department's staff in the light of "Options for Change";

(3) whether there will be any additional expenditure (a) as a total and (b) per head on retraining and resettling civilian support staff who are made redundant as a consequence of "Options for Change";

(4) whether there will be any increase in the number of personnel attached to the Tri-Service Resettlement Organisation in the light of "Options for Change."

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are reviewing the arrangements for the resettlement of service personnel in the light of changing circumstances. As far as civilian staff are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the replies I and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on, respectively, 12 June 1990, at columns 142-43 and 25 July 1990, at column 297.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what redundancy payments service personnel and civilian support staff who are made redundant as a consequence of "Options for Change" will receive;

(2) what measures he intends to take to cope with reductions in service personnel and civilian support staff in the light of "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State informed the House on 19 March at column 149, final decisions on the size and shape of the armed forces have yet to be taken. These decisions will also affect the nature of reductions among civilian support staff.

The expected reductions in both service personnel and civilian staff will be achieved largely by natural wastage. The nature of any redundancy is still under consideration, as are the payments redundant personnel would receive.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information has been provided to the defence industry regarding the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Alan Clark: Ministers and officials in the Department have regular contacts with representatives of the defence industry and have discussed a number of issues related to "Options for Change".

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any proposals to discontinue search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The provision of military search and rescue cover around the United Kingdom is one of many areas of defence activity currently being reviewed under "Options for Change". It is too early to say whether this will have any implications for search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars.

RAF Bases, Lincolnshire

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of each of the RAF bases in Lincolnshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement announced on 28 February last year, at column 290, the withdrawal of Bloodhound from RAF North Coates, which will be closed, and RAF Barkston Heath, which will be retained as a relief landing ground for RAF Cranwell. At present we are examining the scope for rationalising a range of defence support activities, and this may well affect other RAF bases in Lincolnshire, but no decisions have yet been taken.

South Atlantic Fund

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was donated to the South Atlantic fund; how much has been given to members of the South Atlantic forces; and what has happened to surplus money in the fund.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am unable to provide the information requested. These are matters for the trustees of the fund.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to ensure that surpluses from the South Atlantic fund and the Gulf Trust are used specifically for members of the forces injured in other conflicts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no power to make directions for the disbursement of surpluses from the South Atlantic fund or the Gulf Trust.

Taylorplan Services Ltd.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 7 March, Official Report, columns 293-94, if he will list the 20 Ministry of Defence contracts awarded to Taylorplan Services Ltd., together with the total value of each contract; and if he will explain the circumstances in which the two contracts which are no longer current were ended.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to publish detailed lists of contracts awarded to individual companies. The two contracts which are no longer current both expired on the completion of the agreed contract periods.

Walter Somers Ltd.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 444, whether the Ministry of Defence metallurgical expert was aware of the involvement of Dr. Gerard Bull in the proposed export of steel tubes to Iraq at the time of his two conversations with Walter Somers Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

United Nations

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement service personnel or other Ministry of Defence personnel have had in discussions at the United Nations in New York in the last two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom representative at the regular meetings of the United Nations military staff committee is a serving officer. A British Army major was attached to the United Nations field operations division in New York in the period between January 1989 and November 1990 to advise on logistic and other support aspects of peacekeeping and monitoring operations primarily, though not wholly, in connection with United Nations Transition Assistance Group Namibia. Military officers and officials from the Ministry of Defence have also visited the United Nations, particularly in connection with Namibia.

Iraq

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British companies have supplied him with information regarding the export of British non-lethal defence equipment to Iraq in the last eight months.

Mr. Alan Clark: The supply of any such information would be treated in the strictest confidence.

Export Controls

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the work of the co-ordinating committee for multilateral export controls has altered as a result of the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Alan Clark: The committee's work, which relates to strategic exports to the Soviet Union, eastern Europe and China, has been unaffected by events in the Gulf.

Naval Bases

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) NATO, (b) the Allied Commander, Channel, (c) the Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic and (d) the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe on the future of naval bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None, although the NATO authorities are fully aware that we aim to achieve substantial savings in all areas of defence support.

Guardsman Steven Kincaid

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to finalise the necessary arrangements for the release of Guardsman Steven Kincaid from the Irish Guards.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Arrangements are currently being finalised.

BFPO 3000

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the BFPO 3000 appeal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The BFPO appeal has proved enormously successful. The public responded with typical generosity, and well over 100 tonnes of mail and parcels have been sent out to troops serving in the Gulf. More than half our troops have already returned from the Gulf, and there is less of a requirement to maintain the type of support which BFPO 3000 provided. The appeal is therefore being closed. Any residual items will, where appropriate, continue to be sent to the Gulf, or will be redirected to service personnel serving in other locations, including Northern Ireland. I would like to record the Government's appreciation of the magnificent way the country showed its support for our armed forces throughout the Gulf conflict.

RAF Maintenance Group, Brampton

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Royal Air Force support command maintenance group at Brampton.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The maintenance group within RAF support command will become a defence support agency of the Ministry of Defence on 1 April 1991. The group comprises a headquarters at RAF Brampton and 12 RAF stations, together with a number of aerosystems, supply and signals units established at those stations and elsewhere within RAF support and strike commands. It is currently manned by some 7,780 RAF personnel and 5,830 civilians, and for financial year 1991-92 has a projected operating budget of £288 million and a full cost budget of £643 million.

The role of the maintenance group is to provide aerosystems and signals engineering, warehousing and transportation, and communication services to the Royal Air Force. The high professional standards which have characterised the group's support for the RAF will be maintained, and agency status will provide the chief executive with new opportunities to improve the efficiency and value for money of his organisation. The Air Officer Commanding Maintenance Units, Air Vice Marshal D. G. Campbell, has been appointed the agency's chief executive.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the first year of operation of the agency:

- To achieve at least 95 per cent. of specified tasks for 1991-92, representing approximately 75 per cent. of group activity, to standard and on time, and to develop similar measures of programme delivery to cover additional MG tasks by 1 April 1992;
- To reduce the proportion, in value terms, of the total annual throughput of avionic and mechanical components tied up in work by 10 per cent. in 1991-92, and to develop a general costing system for equipment in work by 1 April 1992;
- To perform all operational support tasks to RAF or NATO standards, as appropriate;
- To keep within agreed budget;
- To improve overall efficiency by saving the equivalent of 1·5 per cent. of cash costs in FY 1991-92;
- To determine for future years appropriate measures and targets for efficiency improvement, including units cost targets, by 1 April 1992;

In light of Options and PROSPECT studies, to complete planning for group estate and asset rationalisation, including investment appraisal, by 1 October 1992;

To develop a consistent approach to defining units of output by 1 April 1992;

To introduce a commercial costing system for all major tasks by 1 October 1992.

To complete and validate all capital asset registers, and to develop performance indicators for asset utilisation, by 1 April 1992;

To develop a total quality management (TQM) approach designed to bring out continuous improvement in quality, including increased attention to the balance of quality and cost and to customer satisfaction.

ENERGY

Renewable Energy

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy for the development of renewable energy.

Mr. Moynihan: Renewable energy sources offer both increased diversity of supply and environmental benefits in terms of reduced gaseous emissions. In particular, renewable energy sources can play a part in reducing Britain's emissions of greenhouse gases—carbon dioxide and methane.

The Government's policy set out in Department of Energy paper 55, "Renewable Energy in the United Kingdom—The Way Forward", is to encourage the development of renewable energy sources wherever they have prospects of being both economically competitive and acceptable in terms of the impact on the environment. This policy is in line with the approach of the European Community. The government's White Paper "This Common Inheritance" published in September 1990, said that the Government would work towards 1,000 MW of electricity generating capacity from renewable sources by the year 2005. This will contribute towards achieving the United Kingdom's target of returning carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2005.

The Government introduced the non-fossil fuel obligation in the Electricity Act 1989, which empowers the Secretary of State for Energy to require the regional electricity companies to contract for specified minimum electricity generating capacity from renewable energy sources so as to encourage the exploitation of the country's renewable energy resources. Planning applications for projects which relate to orders under the 1989 Act are in pursuit of this policy. The first order, laid in 1990, resulted in 170 MW being contracted, and a further order is proposed in 1991 giving projects the opportunity to proceed as soon as possible.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning set out some planning guidance on renewable energy for local authorities in answer to a parliamentary question today. Officials in the Departments of Energy and of the Environment and the Welsh Office are preparing a planning policy guidance note on this subject.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by institution and amount the United Kingdom projects that have to date secured funds from the EC THERMIE programme on renewable energy technologies.

Mr. Moynihan: Three United Kingdom projects relating to renewable energy technologies were successful in the first call under the THERMIE programme and contracts are now being negotiated.

Project	Estimated total cost (£)	Maximum grant from the Commission (£)
Vacu-Lug Traction Tyres Ltd.	2,000,000	700,000
Polytechnic of North London	600,000	240,000
National Engineering Laboratory	420,000	170,000

The projects relate, respectively, to environmentally acceptable energy and materials from scrap tyres; demonstrating energy savings in traditional buildings using unconventional planning and daylighting design; and wind-powered desalination by reverse osmosis on a commercial scale.

Magnox Spent Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the arrangements agreed (a) bilaterally and (b) in regard to multilateral treaties to which the United Kingdom is a party, between the United Kingdom and (i) Italy and (ii) Japan, respectively, to apply safeguards to Magnox nuclear fuel sent for reprocessing at Sellafield; and in each case what was the date of the first receipt of spent fuel in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following agreements are in force:

(i) INFCIRC 125—between the United Kingdom, Japan and the IAEA;
(ii) INFCIRC 175—between the United Kingdom and the IAEA;
(iii) INFCIRC 263—between the United Kingdom, the IAEA and the European Atomic Energy Community.

In addition, all civil nuclear material, including that received for reprocessing from Italy and Japan, is subject to Euratom safeguards under the treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community of 1957.

The first receipt of spent fuel from (i) Italy, took place in January 1966; and (ii) Japan took place in September 1969.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recruitment Executive Agency

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made towards the creation of an executive agency within his Department to carry out recruitment and related functions.

Mr. Renton: I am pleased to announce that the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency (RAS) will be launched on 1 April 1991 to coincide with the wider changes in civil service recruitment that I referred to in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 26 March at columns 364-65. It will be the third executive agency to be established in my Department.

The RAS is being created primarily to take over the executive recruitment functions currently performed by the Civil Service Commission. It will charge for all its services; and its customers—mainly Government Departments, other executive agencies and the civil service commissioners—will be free to recruit for themselves or to go elsewhere if they believe that they will obtain better value for money.

Agency status, together with a range of additional managerial freedoms and flexibilities, will enable the RAS to compete effectively for business with other providers in the public and private sectors. I have set demanding targets in the areas of financial performance, operational efficiency and quality of service. These include recovery of full costs; a productivity increase of 6·8 per cent. in the first year; and achievement of an overall customer satisfaction level of at least 85 per cent.

A copy of the framework document will be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Rating System

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (i) for each of the years 1970-71 to 1991-92 an analysis by class of authority of non-domestic rateable values, average poundages, actual payments, and uncollected non-domestic rate-revenue and (ii) for each of the years 1970-71 to 1988-89 by class of authority of domestic rateable values, gross rates, rates net of rebates, and uncollected domestic rate revenue.

Mr. Lang: Figures by class of authority are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the table gives figures that are readily available for all authorities. The split of rates income between the domestic and non-domestic sectors has been estimated pro rata to rateable values. Data on uncollected rate revenue are not available centrally.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish tables comparable to tables 1 to 3 and additional analyses 1 to 3 of "A Commentary on the Scotland Programme: Public Expenditure to 1992-93" consistent with the expenditure plans in Cm. 1515.

Mr. Lang: Tables 1 to 3 and additional analyses 1 and 2 comparable to the tables in a "Commentary on the Scotland Programme: Public Expenditure to 1992-93" consistent with the expenditure plans in Cm. 1515 are as follows.

Additional analyses table 3 is not readily available and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as it is.

Training

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the ability of Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise councils of Scotland to provide special needs training for those who require it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Since the beginning of 1991, I have received 25 representations which, among other issues, express concern about the ability of Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies to provide special needs training for those who require it. Local enterprise companies were required to make adequate provision for people with special needs in their business plans; and the scrutiny of these business plans by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise necessarily included assessment of how well the local enterprise companies' proposals met these needs. Furthermore, one of the criteria by which local enterprise companies are to be judged is their success in catering for special training needs. There is no reason to doubt that Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and local enterprise companies are taking their responsibilities for people with special needs seriously and will deliver appropriate training provision.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate the Scottish Office has made for the share of the youth training budget in the Borders for 1991-92 which is to come from private sources; and if he will make it his policy that if the sum is not forthcoming he will make up any shortfall.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office has no involvement in the allocation of resources by Scottish Enterprise to individual local enterprise companies. These decisions, and any estimates on which they are based, are matters for Scottish Enterprise.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why rate rebates appears as a line without expenditure under non-voted central Government grants to local authorities in table 12.1 of Cm. 1515.

Mr. Lang: This line is for money refunded to the Scottish Office by local authorities that have overclaimed in respect of rate rebate grants in earlier years. The information in this line should, however, accord with that given in the main table on page 2 and I am grateful to the hon. Member for drawing this omission to my attention.

House Valuation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what method the district valuer in Scotland intends to use to value the purchase price of tenanted housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for individual district valuers to determine. I understand that valuations are based and will continue to be based on an analysis of available sales evidence. This is consistent with the approach used in sales of other properties in which district valuers are involved.

Roads

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the outcome of the public local inquiry held in February 1990, following a compulsory purchase order submitted in 1989 to enable the Highlands regional council to acquire land for the north service road, Fort William.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I expect a decision on the compulsory purchase order made by Highland regional council to acquire land for the north service road, Fort William, and which was the subject of a public local inquiry in February and March 1990, to be announced by the end of April.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the countries currently negotiating with AEA Fuel Services to reprocess or store research reactor irradiated fuel at Dounreay;

(2) if he will list the countries that have contracts with AEA Fuel Services or the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Agency to reprocess or store research reactor irradiated fuel at Dounreay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) is currently in discussion with a number of overseas customers about possible contracts to store or reprocess spent research reactor fuel at Dounreay. Until these negotiations have been concluded, however, information on the countries involved is commercially confidential.

The UKAEA has confirmed contracts for storage or reprocessing with customers in Germany. The Government have specified that all reprocessing contracts entered into by the UKAEA with overseas customers must contain options for the return of waste and that these options should be exercised.

Dounreay

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent developments have taken place at the Atomic Energy Development Establishment at Dounreay to reduce the levels of radioactive waste discharged to the sea.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Significant process modifications were carried out during the period 1978-83, including the commissioning of an additional plant to reduce the activity in the aqueous discharges from nuclear fuel reprocessing. Since that time further improvements have been achieved by operational means.

Because reprocessing requirements differ from year to year and the plants are not run continuously, discharges will vary from one period to another. They have consistently been well below the authorised limits. A revised liquid waste authorisation with reduced limits was issued in 1989.

Parking Offences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parking tickets were received and paid by his Department in each year since 1988 in respect of official vehicles.

Mr. Lang: The responsibility for parking fines incurred by official vehicles was until April 1990 the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Since that date 15 fines totalling £240 are attributed to vehicles of my Department.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the revenue (b) the capital and (c) the total allocation for Lothian health board for 1991-92 and each of the last five financial years in (i) cash terms, (ii) 1986-87 prices and (iii) 1990-91 prices.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 13 March, Official Report, columns 616-17, whether he will exhume the bodies of the BSE confirmed cattle that were buried in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Hospitals

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals have applied to opt out of health board contol in each of the Scottish health board areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expressions of interest have been received on behalf of seven Units. These are the South Ayrshire unit (Ayrshire and Arran health board), Foresterhill and West Grampian (Grampian health board), Forfar hospitals (Tayside health board), the Victoria infirmary and associated hospitals (Greater Glasgow health board), the Royal Scottish national hospital (Forth Valley health board) and the Princess Margaret Rose hospital (Lothian health board). Of these Foresterhill and South Ayrshire have indicated that they intend to bring forward an application in the near future.

Education and Business Partnerships

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about support for partnerships between education and business in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I attach high priority to establishing effective links between the worlds of education and business. Each has a vital role in the future well-being of our country and it is essential that they work closely together. Much valuable work is already going on in this field but it is recognised by many of those involved that the effectiveness of these efforts could be improved.

Proposals to promote and develop education-business link activities feature prominently in the business plans submitted by the local enterprise companies and I very much welcome this. In order to further assist this work and ensure that it attracts the priority which I believe it requires, additional financial support is being made available specifically to encourage the development of education-business partnerships.

This funding will be provided to local enterprise companies through Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to support a variety of aspects of liaison between business and education, including providing placements with business for pupils and teachers, business visits to schools and a wide range of innovative activities which will bring benefits to both education and business.

The LEC-promoted partnerships will be expected to raise funding from other sources so that maximum benefit can be gained from public support.

I am confident that local enterprise companies, education authorities and organisations already involved in this area will work closely together to get these partnership arrangements under way to the benefit of the whole community and I am now inviting education authorities and other interested parties to approach their LECs to discuss how these proposals can best be taken forward.

School Examinations

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to improve the quality of spelling, grammar and punctuation in Scottish school examinations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The ability to communicate clearly in writing is a fundamental skill which should be fostered in all school work and examinations. Good grammar and punctuation and correct spelling are essential to clear communication. Currently a variety of practices is operated by the Scottish Examination Board in its examinations in relation to these elements. The board has been asked to review these practices and it has this in hand. Meanwhile examiners will no doubt take account of spelling, grammar and punctuation in accordance with the arrangements that currently apply to each subject.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits for 1990-91 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Yes, I intend to change one of the cash limits within my responsibility as follows.

The cash limit for class XV, vote 15, education, arts, libraries and social work, Scotland will be reduced by £1,032,000 from £233,075,000 to £232,043,000. This represents the further cash limit reductions foreshadowed in my answer to the hon. Member for Tayside, North on 1 February at columns 685-86 and will offset the amounts of £617,000 required to meet increased expenditure in respect of the St. Helena ship and £415,000 in respect of the Department of the Registers of Scotland.

Bone Marrow Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make additional facilities available to Greater Glasgow health board for bone marrow transplants at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 November 1990]: Central funding for this service has been assured until April 1991. Thereafter the revenue allocated to Greater Glasgow health board will provide the resources necessary to treat its own bone marrow transplant patients; and the board will be fully compensated during the course of the year for the costs to it of treating any bone marrow transplant patients referred by other boards.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of patients on the waiting list for bone marrow transplants at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 November 1990]: At the end of 1990 the waiting list for patients for bone marrow transplants at Glasgow royal infirmary was 31.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in the last year have died while awaiting bone marrow transplantation at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 November 1990]: During 1990, a total of seven patients died while awaiting bone marrow transplantation at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Chemical Incinerators

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he offers to local authorities concerning the granting of planning permission for the construction of chemical incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 March 1991]: No specific advice is given to local authorities concerning the granting of planning permission for the construction of chemical incinerators. General advice and guidance on handling planning applications and other planning matters is contained in a number of circulars issued by the Scottish Office.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 188

SESSION 1990–91

18th March—28th March 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
